"The establishment, maintenance, rehabilitation, construction and operation of a rapid transit system for the transportation of passengers, express, mail and baggage between points in New Jersey communities within the Port District and within a thirty-five (35) mile radius of the City of Camden, New Jersey, and points within the City of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and intermediate points. Such system may be established by either utilizing existing rapid transit systems, railroad facilities, highways and bridges within the territory involved or by the construction or provision of new facilities where deemed necessary."

However, Article XII of the compact further provides that the Port Authority may not proceed "unless and until (it) shall have made to the Legislature and Governor of the State of New Jersey and to the Legislature and Governor of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania a detailed report dealing only with such contemplated facility or project, and the Governor of said State and the Governor of said Commonwealth shall have filed with the Commission their written consents to such construction, erection or acquisition."

On May 4, 1954, Secretary of the Army Robert T. Stevens finally held that the new schedule of tolls which became effective on the Delaware River Bridge on June 20, 1953, was fair and reasonable and discontinued proceedings in the so-called "Camden Bridge Tolls Case."

This action, in the judgment of the Transportation Committee, removed the last obstacle which restrained it from proceeding actively with a survey of a mass transportation system for Southern New Jersey.

A detailed account of the successive meetings of the Committee, as a result of which it recommended to the Authority on August 18, 1954, that the New York engineering firm of Parsons, Brinckerhoff, Hall and MacDonald be retained to conduct the survey, is contained in the brochure, "The Southern New Jersey Mass Transportation Survey and Report," forwarded to members of both legislatures last September. In passing, it may be of interest that almost 7,000 copies of this brochure have been distributed to public officials, schools, civic, business and professional groups and other key segments of the general public to inform them of what is being attempted and to secure their cooperation.

It would unduly burden this report to relate here all of the steps which the Transportation Committee traversed in arriving at its choice of engineering consultants and, even more importantly, at the general scope of the survey itself. It appears desirable, nonetheless, to repeat here four basic policy considrations which the Committee concluded were fundamental. These the Authority endorsed and Parsons, Brinckerhoff, Hall and MacDonald accepted as basic in the undertaking. They are:

1. The survey is to be unconditionally comprehensive.
2. It is to be completely independent of direction by or dictation from the Port Authority.
3. The final report shall include an independent analysis by at least one independent banking house, commenting upon its financial feasibility.
4. The report is to be final and complete in itself and is not to contain suggestions for supplemental studies or surveys other than the necessary refinement of cost estimates required for financing.

Our consultants have organized the survey under five major categories: regional planning, highway and transit survey, population and economic studies, transit facilities planning and financial analysis.

The surevy contract was awarded on the basis of cost plus fixed fee not to exceed $325,000 with the condition that it must be completed with presentation of final report and financial feasibility analysis by October 19, 1955.

By the end of the year, six fundamental studies were either complete or essentially complete. They were mapping and tabulating of existing land use and controls, data collection, collection and analysis of preliminary data, preparatory determination of procedure and methods, estimates and projections of 1955 population and employment and determination and estimates of 1955 sub-areas population. This assembly of the statistical ground work will be followed, early in 1955, by intensive surveys of the movement of people by all means of transportation within the area. Mail return questionnaires and personal interviewing of motorists, public transportation patrons and residents of the area in their homes will supply an enormous volume of additional statistical data.

The fundamental problem to which we and our engineers are addressing ourselves is not unique with the Philadelphia-South Jersey area. It is one which is of chronic concern to almost every major industrial-metropolitan area in the United States. The survey and report which we will receive next fall is certain to be a document of national, if not international, interest.

IN CONCLUSION

We believe that between the lines of this necessarily succinct report it is clearly evident that 1954 was, for this Authority, one of great activity and measurable accomplishment. It is implicit in the year's record also that the Authority, in common with other agencies of government and private enterprise generally, is pursuing its existence in the heart of a dynamically expanding economy.

In the fruition of the year's plans, we are under obligation to pay solemn tribute to two members of the Authority who died during the year—the Honorable Bernard Samuel, former Mayor of the City of Philadelphia, and Dr. I. Norwood Griscom, oldest member in years of service of the Authority and its predecessor corporations, the Delaware River Joint Commission and the Delaware River Joint Bridge Commission. Both men were faithful and devoted Commissioners, and we here note their passing with affection and respect.

The vacancy created by the death of former Mayor Samuel was filled by Governor John S. Fine of Pennsylvania, with the appointment of Joseph W. Henderson, Esquire, of Philadelphia.

At the first meeting of the year, J. William Markheim, of Haddonfield, and Earl B. Howe, of Mount Holly, took their seats on the Commission, to fill the vacancies caused by the resignation of Allen S. Hatcher and Clarence B. McCormick.

It was our pleasure to have had many of you as our guests on ceremonial occasions during the year just passed. We anticipate that there will be at least one major, official inspection of the rising bridge structure sometime during the late summer or early fall of the year upon which we are entering. We hope that it will be possible for you to favor us with your attendance at that time. The Commissioners of the Authority, its officers and personnel meanwhile cordially invite you to call upon us for our services or to inspect our facilities at any time. You may rest assured of a friendly welcome.

Respectfully submitted,

We have examined the balance sheet of Delaware River Port Authority as of December 31, 1954, the statement of revenues and expenses for the year then ended and related supporting statements. Our examination was made in accordance with generally accepted auditing standards, and accordingly included such tests of the accounting records and such other auditing procedures as we considered necessary in the circumstances.

Because the accounts for tolls, rentals and operating expenses are maintained on the cash basis, the accompanying statements do not reflect prepayments and accruals of certain relatively minor items. Otherwise the accounting is maintained on the accrual basis.

Subject to the preceding paragraph, it is our opinion, that the accompanying balance sheet, statement of revenues and expenses and supporting related statements fairly present the financial position of the Delaware River Port Authority at December 31, 1954 and the results of operations for the twelve months then ended, in conformity with acceptable accounting principles consistently applied.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE DELAWARE RIVER PORT AUTHORITY OF PENNSYLVANIA AND NEW JERSEY

To the Honorable: The Governors and the Legislatures of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and the State of New Jersey

At the approximate mid-point of the fourth year of its existence as the public corporate successor to the Delaware River Joint Commission, the Delaware River Port Authority has the honor herein to render an accounting upon a twelve-month of intense and, we believe, constructive activity in the mutual interest of the people of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and the State of New Jersey.

The year 1955 was one of undertakings carried forward and of new projects initiated within the scope of obligations and responsibilities to which we were committed by the interstate compact legislation of 1951.

While we, as the Commissioners of the Port Authority, believe that the decisions taken in the year 1955 were marked by prudent and responsible action, they were inseparably related and in large measure dictated by two facts of preeminent importance.

The first is the multitude of difficult problems arising out of the increasing concentration of population and the demand for the swift and efficient transport of that population, its goods and services in an expanding metropolitan area such as comprises the Port District.

The search for feasible solutions of these problems was carried forward during the year diligently and, in some instances, even desperately, at every level of Government, local, State and Federal. We have sought to make useful contribution to the planning and development of projects appropriate to the sobering challenge, within the perimeter of our statutory authority and responsibility.

The other of the two facts, too frequently either overlooked, misunderstood or minimized, is the critical need not only to maintain, but to develop and improve the opportunities and facilities of the Delaware River Port. The very phrase "port activity" is unfortunately but unavoidably vague because it reflects interrelated economic functions and needs of extra-ordinary complexity and sensitiveness. The movement of bulk and general cargo upon the Delaware and across the hundreds of piers lining it from Trenton to Wilmington and the relationship of that commerce to every conceivable level of our system of free enterprise may not easily be comprehended.

During the past year, the research and statistical section of our Port Development Department made a significant contribution to that public awareness. A revision of a unique study published several years ago disclosed that the direct dollar income to the Port Area contributed by port activities for the year 1954 was $613,-648,750.45, an increase in only four years of 52.4 percent.

To quote the language of the report:

"The sum is direct revenue. It is money which would not circulate in the area were it not for Philadelphia's greatest single asset, the port."

What is said of Philadelphia may be said equally not only of the other ports flanking the great estuary of the Delaware—Trenton, Burlington, Bordentown, Bristol, Morrisville, Camden, Paulsboro, Gloucester, Chester, Marcus Hook and Wilmington—but of their extensive industrial, commercial, agricultural and residential hinterland.

Thus, the Port of 1954 was directly responsible for the production of more than $1,500,000,000 in purchasing power within the Port District, applying the normal factor of two and one-half times for the turnover of income. The protection and enlargement of an activity producing so great a sum is of consequence to every person living within the area of its direct influence, be his economic status great or small. While others, both public and private, share the obligation to protect and enhance the Port's business, it is ours by unmistakable direction of the interstate compact legislation.

We respectfully suggest that the two facts enumerated above, the problems associated with metropolitan growth and traffic congestion, and those related to the protection and development of the Port's business, be borne steadily in mind with respect to the balance of this report. Basically, each of the activities discussed more particularly in subsequent pages and in the appendices represents a concern with one or the other and, in one particular instance, with both.

By way of summary:

Steady progress on schedule in construction of the Walt Whitman Bridge (heretofore referred to as the Packer Avenue-Gloucester City Bridge), application to and approval of by the Governor and the Legislature of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania for authorization to construct a new high-level bridge connecting Northeast Philadelphia and New Jersey and imminent receipt of a survey and report on a Southern New Jersey Mass Transportation System relate to the challenge of metropolitan growth and expansion.

The Authority's unswerving championship of a deeper channel in the Delaware between the Philadelphia Naval Base and Trenton, its aggressive prosecution before the Interstate Commerce Commission of a variety of rate cases affecting commerce within and through the Port District, and in particular its determined policy to protect the best interests of the Port District in connection with the publicly-announced intention of the ports of New York and Boston to attack the existing differentials in railroad rates for water-borne commerce, reflect concern for the integrity of our maritime interest.

Application of the Authority, supported by an engineers' perliminary report and survey, for consent from the Governors and Legislatures of the two states to construct a new high-level bridge connecting Philadelphia's teeming, traffic-ridden Northeast with neighboring New Jersey attests how, in a major instance, the two concerns are joined. A new high-level structure with planned, limited-access approaches will enable both local and interstate traffic to vault time-consuming traffic congestion. At the same time, replacement of the low-level, lift-type Tacony-Palmyra Bridge will remove a serious obstruction to the swiftly mounting commerce of the port.

A recognition of our obligation to the public interest, on the one hand, and its translation into projects and activities upon the other, are brought to focus upon one responsibility which is basic to all others. The Delaware River Port Authority receives no financial support of any kind from the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania or the State of New Jersey. It may neither rely upon nor have recourse to the credit of either state or of any of its municipalities. Therefore, the ability of the Authority to expand the scope of its activities in the public interest rests unconditionally upon the management of the funds which it receives in toll charges in such fashion that its credit is maintained at the highest. This is the clear mandate of the interstate compact legislation, and it is specifically affirmed in the concurrent resolutions of Congress by specific exceptions to the General Bridge Act of 1946.

THE WALT WHITMAN BRIDGE

Two years and three months and $61,026,079.54 of contractual commitments after the first contract was awarded for "the bridge over the Delaware River connecting Packer Avenue, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and Gloucester City, New Jersey," the first physical connection between the two states became a reality.

During the forenoon of Thursday, September 29, 1955, as members of the Authority, its staff and engineers looked on from the deck of a tugboat, the first of the six 2¼ inch steel cables to support the suspended working platforms or "catwalks" for the spinning of the main cables was hoisted into place in a graceful loop over the river between the Gloucester and Philadelphia towers.

On the last day of the year, 26 of the 74 strands of wire which will comprise the finished cables had been strung in place, representing slightly over 35 percent of the total cable-spinning work. There will be 37 strands in each cable, each strand is made up of 308 steel wires, and there will be 11,396 wires in each cable. When finally compacted into cylindrical form, each cable will have a diameter of 23-1/8 inches, as compared with the 30-inch diameter of the main cables of Benjamin Franklin Bridge, which contain 18,666 wires each. At the present rate of progress, there is sound basis for confidence that the cable-spinning operation will be completed in March 1956. Traffic will flow across the structure in 1957.

The new span, variously known in preceding months of its planning, design and construction as the "Packer Avenue-Gloucester City Bridge" and "DRB (Delaware River Bridge) #2," by action of the Authority on July 20, 1955, officially became known as the "Walt Whitman Bridge."

A Special Committee on Bridge Names appointed on November 17, 1954, gave careful consideration to the subject of renaming both the Delaware River Bridge connecting Philadelphia and Camden and the new Packer Avenue-Gloucester City Bridge. The report of the Special Committee, relating in detail its thinking and conclusions, was reprinted in a special brochure of which more than 7,000 copies have been distributed to date.

In brief, the Committee recommended that the Philadelphia-Camden Bridge be renamed in honor of Benjamin Franklin and dedicated on the occasion of Franklin's 250th anniversary, January 17, 1956. Special bronze tablets to be placed on the Camden and Philadelphia Plazas memorializing the event will be unveiled on that date with appropriate ceremonies. A special Benjamin Franklin medallion also has been ordered struck by the Authority, in limited quantity, and these will be presented to all active and former members of the Commission and to a few individuals representing organizations and institutions which Franklin founded or with which he actively was affiliated during his life-time.

The Committee likewise recommended that the name of Walt Whitman be bestowed upon the new bridge, in honor of the distingushed American poet who spent the last twenty years of his life as a resident of Camden. His home on Mickle Street is maintained as a museum by the State of New Jersey.

During the year, $12,987,862.28 of contracts were awarded for the Walt Whitman Bridge as compared with the total contract commitment of $48,038,217.26 which we reported to you as of December 31, 1954. In August, the last construction contract provided for the initial design of the bridges and its 5½ miles of limited access approach roads—bridges over Crescent Boulevard and the Black Horse Pike in New Jersey—was let.

One month later, the Authority took an action directly reflecting its recognition of the impact of metropolitan growth, emphasized in the preface of this report. Initially, it had been decided that "Ramp M," an "on" ramp connecting Penrose Avenue with the bridge approach at a point about midway between 19th and 20th Streets need not be constructed immediately. Upon recommendation of the consulting engineers, the property upon which the ramp ultimately would be constructed was acquired, but the actual construction deferred. In its place, a temporary stub-ramp, rising from about the intersection of Penrose and Packer Avenues, and connecting with the main approach east of Uber Street was authorized.

In the interim of only a few years, however, it was realized that the pace of residential, industrial and business development in Delaware County and the volume of traffic likely to be induced, principally over the Penrose Avenue Bridge over the Schuylkill River, was such that construction of the permanent ramp entrance to accommodate this traffic should not be deferred. Its construction, at an estimated cost in excess of $600,000, was therefor authorized in September. Contracts for its construction are expected to be awarded early in the coming year.

With this single and logical exception, therefore, every major construction contract for the eighth largest suspension bridge in the world has been awarded. Remaining to be awarded are contracts for roadway paving, drainage and lighting, administration and maintenance buildings and the toll houses and their equipment. The final contracts—for landscaping, fencing and clean-up—are scheduled to be awarded at mid-summer.

One year ago, the line of the right-of-way of the bridge and its approaches was interrupted and discontinuous, even to the aerial observer, from the Black Horse Pike in New Jersey to 28th Street and Vare Avenue in Philadelphia. From one terminus to the other, the scene now is one either of completed structures or other structures rising swiftly to impart a new topography to the once lonely and swamp-like reaches of the Newton Creek swamps and South Philadelphia's "Meadows."

The members of the Authority fully appreciate the financial positions of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and of the City of Philadelphia, realizing that every dollar of available revenue is being competed for by many and vital government demands. We nonetheless feel obliged to again note, with regret, that the full usefulness of the Walt Whitman Bridge and its approaches will not and cannot be realized for at least two years after its opening to traffic unless in the meanwhile a major Federal highway construction program provides funds for completion of the Schuylkill Expressway.

In our 1954 report to you, we invited your sympathetic attention to the fact that the vital link in the expressway, extending from 30th and Arch Streets in Philadelphia along the west bank of the Schuylkill, over a new bridge in the vicinity of University Avenue and thence by way of a limited access highway to our end of construction at 28th Street and Vare Avenue, would not be completed by the date of the opening of the bridge to traffic. Last May, we were advised officially that, unless large Federal funds are made available to Pennsylvania, this link cannot be completed before 1959 at the earliest.

This unfortunate situation compels us to advise that not only will the full and planned usefulness of the bridge and its approaches not be realized, but a very severe burden of increased traffic congestion is almost certain to be inflicted upon already over-burdened central Philadelphia streets by the deflection of bridge traffic over 7th and Broad Streets.

We most respectfully urge action to expedite the completion of this essential link in the highway system at the earliest opportune moment.

In a conclusion to this report upon progress in construction of the Walt Whitman Bridge, we are pleased to advise that as early as last September, we were able to state the total cost of the new bridge, including land acquisition, will be slightly less than the $90,000,000 estimated almost five years ago. No further financing of any kind will be necessary.

THE NORTHEAST PHILADELPHIA—NEW JERSEY BRIDGE PROJECT

On December 13, 1955, Governor George M. Leader, of Pennsylvania, signed into law a measure "authorizing and empowering" the Delaware River Port Authority to construct a high-level toll bridge for vehicular traffic connecting Northeast Philadelphia and New Jersey.

The following portion of the title of the act is self-explanatory:

> "An Act authorizing and empowering the Delaware River Port Authority to finance, construct, operate, maintain and own a new toll bridge for vehicular traffic across the Delaware River between Philadelphia County, Pennsylvania, and Burlington County or Camden County, New Jersey, at a location to be selected by the said Delaware River Port Authority between a point or points within a three-mile radius of the intersection of State Road and Levick Street in the City of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and a point or points within a three-mile radius of the intersection of New Jersey State Route No. 73, Market Street and Temple Boulevard in Palmyra, County of Burlington, New Jersey . . ."

Enactment of identical legislation by the Legislature of New Jersey and approval by the Governor will be necessary before the Port Authority may proceed with the next step in the process of bridge construction—that is, application for a permit to the Philadelphia District Engineer of the Corps of Engineers, United States Army.

The history of this project dates back to the interstate compact legislation of 1951. In Article XII of the compact, provision was made for acquisition by the Port Authority of "all right, title and interest in and to the Tacony-Palmyra Bridge" by purchase or condemnation. The right of acquisition, however, could not be exercised "unless and until the Governor of the State of New Jersey and the Governor of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania have filed with the Commission their written consent to such acquisition."

This consent was exercised and, therefore, exhausted under the law, by Governor John S. Fine, of Pennsylvania, on August 18, 1953, and by Governor Alfred E. Driscoll, of New Jersey, on November 4, 1953. The consent documents are on file with the Secretary of the State of New Jersey and the Secretary of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, and with this Authority.

The eventual need for a high-level bridge with limited-access approach highways to expedite the flow of interstate traffic between Northeast Philadelphia and an opposite point in New Jersey long had been appreciated both by this Authority and its corporate predecessor, the Delaware River Joint Commission. The crystallization of the need came, however, more speedily than had been anticipated.

Contrary to a rather wide impression, industrial and business expansion and their accompanying acceleration of residential building, on both banks of the river had been in evidence before the United States Steel Company constructed and placed in operation in 1952, its gigantic integrated steel plant, the Fairless Works, in lower Bucks County, Pennsylvania. Establishment of the Fairless Works, however, was the factor which focused attention upon and brought sharply to public notice the expanding area now konwn around the world as "Delaware Valley, U. S. A." The steel plant literally was a trumpet-note, heralding the march of industry to tidewater in order to take advantage of transportation economies in the import of raw materials and the export of finished and semi-finished products.

The discovery, development and import into this country of high-grade iron ores from the Cerro Bolivar area of Venezuela and from Quebec-Labrador, caused the almost overnight rocketing of ore shipments on the Delaware to a total of 4,840,000 tons in 1954.

The growing procession of ore boats upon the river bound for the head of Newbold Island, and the certainty that a more diverse traffic northward of the Tacony-Palmyra Bridge soon would become a fact, confronted both maritime and interstate vehicular commerce and travel.

The necessity of opening the low-level bridge for the passage upstream and downstream of commercial vessels which, due to barely adequate channel depths, are measurably dependent upon the flood tides, was exaggerated by the severe congestion of traffic on the bridge approaches, particularly in the heavily congested city streets of the Tacony area of Philadelphia. On occasion, it was necessary for the span to remain open for over half an hour, and the ensuing traffic congestion resulted in delays for motorist which were all but punitive in degree.

The matter came to a head on March 10, 1955 when, in consequence of a petition submitted to the Philadelphia District Engineer by the Burlington Bridge Commission, formal request was made at public hearing by the latter for permission to keep the bridge closed to river traffic from 7 to 8:30 A.M., and from 4:30 to 6 P.M., Monday through Friday. The petition was vigorously opposed by maritime interests, who emphasized the severe penalties that would be imposed upon operators of shipping.

The decision of the Philadelphia District Engineer, though momentarily anticipuated, had not been made public as the year ended.

One other prohibition upon the Authority's exercise of the right to construct a new highlevel bridge over upper tidewater and to acquire the Tacony-Palmyra Bridge as an element thereof existed.

Outstanding bonds of the Burlington County Bridge Commission on the Tacony-Palmyra and Burlington-Bristol Bridges contained a guarantee that no other bridge would be constructed within ten miles of those structures during the life of the bonds. The exception, as provided in reciprocal legislation is the bridge over the Delaware River at Edgely-Florence connecting the Pennsylvania and New Jersey Turnpike. Furthermore, an opinion of the New Jersey State Supreme Court directed that neither bridge might be acquired, either by purchase or condemnation, until the bonds had been retired.

After lengthy discussion and upon advice of counsel, the Authority on April 20, 1955, decided to retain engineers to prepare a preliminary survey and report on a new high-level bridge, with estimates of cost and provisions for financing. This action was taken in the light of the situation presented at the hearing before the District Engineer, and of an announcement that the Burlington County Bridge Commission would retire all of its outstanding bonds either in the late summer or the fall of the year. A further consideration was that if authorizing legislation were not enacted by the Legislature of Pennsylvania during the biennial session of 1955, no action could be anticipated until the session of 1957. In the meantime, it was felt, conditions affecting both river and interstate vehicular traffic might become so grave as to warrant the charge that the Authority had been remiss in its public duty.

The resolution of April directed the Executive Director and Counsel to proceed with the necessary steps to acquire Tacony-Palmyra Bridge by purchase or condemnation; authorized the Transportation Committee of the Authority to retain consulting engineers to prepare a preliminary survey and report, and directed counsel to prepare a draft of legislation to be submitted to the Legislature of Pennsylvania and New Jersey.

At the next succeeding meeting, the engineering firms of Modjeski and Masters—Ammann and Whitney, designers and supervisors of construction of the Walt Whitman Bridge, Were retained to prepare a preliminary survey and report, as required by the interestate compact.

On June 13, 1955, the draft of an act authorizing the Port Authority to construct a new high-level bridge was introduced with bi-partisan support in the Senate of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania. The measure was reported out of committee and passed unanimously by the Senate of Pennsylvania on September 27, 1955.

On September 14, 1955, as a direct result of its planned retirement of all of its outstanding bonds on October 1, 1955, the Burlington County Bridge Commission reduced its toll rate to five cents on both the Tacony-Palmyra and Burlington-Bristol Bridges. The action was in conformity with the Act of Congress of January 25, 1927, authorizing construction of the Tacony-Palmyra Bridge, which provided that after the bridge was debt-free, the rates of toll thereafter should be "so adjusted as to provinde a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper care, repair, maintenance and operation of the bridge and its approaches."

The report of the consulting engineers, incorporated in the report of the Port Authority to the legislature of the two states, is dated August 17, 1955. In brief, the engineers reported upon three sites: (1) between Pennypack Park, Philadelphia and the Pompess Creek area of New Jersey, approximately 1¾ miles north of the present Tacony-Palmyra Bridge; (2) between Devereaux Street Philadelphia, and the southern margin of the Borough of Palmyra, New Jersey, approximately one-fourth mile south of the Tacony-Palmyra Bridge, and (3) a point in Pennsylvania some 400 feet north of the Pennsylvania Railroad Bridge at Delair.

The sites and the relative advantages are discussed at length in the report of the engineers. At each site, provision is made for adequate limited access connections and approaches.

Cost of construction, including land acquisition, of a bridge and its approaches at the Devereaux-Palmyra site is estimated at $44,990,300. The same all-inclusive cost of a structure, with approaches, at the Delair-Bridge site is estimated at $53,403,700. The northern site, in the engineers' view, is too remote to accommodate properly the bulk of the present traffic utilizing the Tacony-Palmyra Bridge.

At either site, the bridge would be of cantilever type with a main span of 1,000 feet and two side spans of 423½ feet. The roadway would be 79 feet wide between curbs, or slightly greater than that of the Benjamin Franklin Bridge. At the Devereaux-Palmyra site, the bridge, with approaches, would be 5.96 miles in length; at the Delair site, 3.73 miles.

The Authority found, on the basis of the preliminary engineering and traffic survey, that financing construction of the bridge should present no particular problem. Informal assurance to this effect has been obtained from investment bankers.

Between the dates of the submission of the report to the Legislature of Pennsylvania and enactment of the enabling legislation, another development of significant importance took place. On November 4, 1955, the Philadelphia District Engineer's Office awarded a contract for design of the rehabilitation of the Pennsylvania Railroad Bridge at Delair to the engineering firm of Hardesty and Hanover. At the March hearing on application of the Burlington County Bridge Commission, strong emphasis was laid in testimony by representatives of port interests that widening of the space between piers of the Delair Bridge was of vital importance to the free passage of river craft—in effect, one of two bottlenecks of which Tacony-Palmyra Bridge was the other.

Thus, within the space of slightly over one month, official steps were taken to clear the way on the upper reach of tidewater for water-and land-borne commerce.

THE BENJAMIN FRANKLIN BRIDGE

Twenty-nine years and twenty days after the date of its opening to traffic, the bridge over the Delaware River connecting Philadelphia and Camden was renamed the "Benjamin Franklin Bridge."

The great bridge, which has witnessed the ebb and flow of three of the momentous decades in human history, commemorated its own renaming by accommodating an all-time record of 32,058,006 vehicles.

The tremendous flow of traffic, representing an increase over 1954 of 1,142,976 or 3.7 percent, was almost twice that of only nine years ago, the first full post-war year.

Selection of the name of the great American writer, statesman, diplomat and scientist by the Special Committee on Bridge Names on July 20, whose report has been discussed in a preceding section, was literally dictated by the circumstances of geography and history.

Benjamin Franklin's renowned "kite experiment" took place within a stone's throw of the Philadelphia Anchorage. His grave is located only one square to the south of the Bridge Plaza. Only three blocks to the south is Independence Hall, where he toiled in the councils of independence and national unity. The Philadelphia Plaza immediately adjoins Franklin Square. Franklin Street is only a half block removed. The main approach streets to the bridge in Philadelphia intersect the Benjamin Franklin Parkway literally at the main entrance of Franklin Institute and Museum.

Finally, the bridge will be officially dedicated on January 17, 1956, the 250th anniversary of Franklin's birth. which will be officially commemorated by more than two score countries and by countless learned societies. institutions and agencies of which the great Franklin was either the actual or spiritual patron.

Despite hurricanes, high tides and a reduction to five cents in mid-September of tolls upon the Tacony-Palmyra Bridge, seven miles upstream, all of which had their demonstrable influence, the final traffic figures for the year were close to the estimates made by traffic engineers in 1952 as a part of necessary preplanning for financing of the new Walt Whitman Bridge. Their estimate for traffic on Benjamin Franklin Bridge for this year was exceeded by 301,006 vehicles, or 0.94 percent.

Wind and weather not only affected the volumes and speed of travel upon the bridge, but gave even more pointed emphasis to the pressing need for modernization of the Camden approaches, a fact of which the Authority took repeated cognizance in the latter months of the year.

If the Eastern seaboard continues to lie within the path of tropical disturbances originating in the Caribbean area, bridge traffic is almost certain to be affected fractionally. The Hurricane "Connie" and "Diane" of last August caused a loss during the period August 10-14 of a net of 56,728 vehicles as compared with the same period of 1954.

It was neither of these storms, however, but wind and heavy rainfall in the Delaware's upstate drainage basin during October which, by causing high river tides, backed up storm sewers with water from the Cooper River and either completely blocked or seriously restricted bridge traffic on the Admiral Wilson Boulevard approaches. The resulting congestion of traffic was felt repeatedly from Central Philadelphia deep into Camden County.

The seriousness of the situation, accentuated as a public problem by the devastating damage and casualties inflicted by Hurricane "Diane's" torrential rains, prompted the Authority to renew conversations on the subject of modern approaches with Governor Robert B. Meyner of New Jersey and New Jersey State Highway Commissioner Dwight R. G. Palmer. Governor Meyner and Commissioner Palmer on a previous occasion had concurred fully in recognition of the need for modernizing the pathetically inadequate Penn-Linden Street approach system, but had pointed to the obvious fact that State highway funds were not adequate to finance the ideal solution, that is, a limited access approach highway, paralleling heavily congested and commercialized Admiral Wilson Boulevard and entering a depressed or elevated multi-lane roadway in the vicinity of 11th Street, Camden.

Renewed discussion of the matter, prompted by the October interruption to traffic, resulted in tentative agreement that new approaches could well be included in any expanded State highway program resulting from enactment by the Congress of a major arterial highway measure. The Authority indicated its readiness to assume whatever share of the costs might lie within its legal area of responsibility and freedom of action.

Despite these various factors adversely affecting traffic flows however, the totals in all categories for the year 1955 made one fact clear—the steady, day-in-day-out mounting traffic pressure whose relief only the opeing of the Walt Whitman Bridge to traffic a year and a few months hence will effectively serve.

We are pleased to advise that, in the face of an unprecedented volume of traffic, the record of Benjamin Franklin Bridge as a "safe" highway of travel remained constant. There was only one accident for every 88,671 vehicle miles of travel. As in previous years, this safety record was due largely to incessant patrol of the structure from plaza to plaza by our two-way radio-equipped vehicles and the instant readiness for action of emergency equipment. Police vehicles traveled a total of 465,460 miles in every condition of temperature and weather, twenty-four hours a day, seven days a week. The statistics prove beyond question that this constant vigilance paid over-whelming dividends.

A number of changes were made in equipment and toll bureau procedures during the year to effect a more efficient toll collection and verification system, including revision of the ticket-counting method and time-and-date stamping of tickets. Mirrors placed on each toll island facilitated the work of the toll collecting personnel in identifying the weight classification code letter which appears on the license plate of trucks operating under Pennsylvania registration.

Measures such as these were, of course, rountine administrative and operational innovations, the result of unremitting study of how to improve bridge operation. Also routine was the steady, undramatic operation of the maintenance, electrical and highway personnel in maintaining the bridge and its appurtenant structures in safe, orderly and presentable condition.

There were several improvements of bridge property which did catch the public eye, however. One was the replacement of the old title, "Delaware River Joint Commission" with the new "Delaware River Joint Authority," on the maintenance building and the high-speed line sub-stations and on the facade of the Administration Building. Another was the planting of a number of "Franklin Trees" on the triangular pot abutting the Camden Toll Plaza on the south.

The Franklin tree, discovered in a Georgia swamp late in the 18th century by John Bartram, great Philadelphia botanist and horticulturist and named in honor of his friend and patron, Benjamin Franklin, blooms profusely from mid-summer to first frost. It should prove a welcome addition to the decorative planting and uniquely appropriate to the bridge's newly acquired name.

As in former years, the Authority cooperated in all civil defense and security exercises to the limit of requests from properly constituted authorities. On Wednesday, April 20, the Camden Plaza was occupied by one tank and an anti-aircraft crew during "Operation Minuteman" conducted by the National Guard Bureau, Department of the Army. The bridge was not closed to traffic on that occasion, but traffic was halted on June 15 for ten minutes during the nation-wide civil defense exercise "Operation Alert," and again for the same duration on Thursday, October 27, for "Operation Muster" ordered by New Jersey's Civil Defense and Disaster Control agency.

It is gratifying to report that, following a periodic "Defense Production Security Survey" by an officer assigned from headquarters of the First Army, Gevernor's Island, the security officer's report, as it related to Benjamin Franklin Bridge, read:

"Management is definitely interested in maintaining an adequate state of prepardness to meet both peacetime and wartime emergencies. It is believed that all security measures necessary are being taken at the present time. No further recommendations are made."

On December 31, 1955, total authorized personnel of the Delaware River Port Authority was 265, an increase of 5 employees over the preceding year.

The low rate of personnel turnover continued through 1955. There were 13 personnel separations during the year, resulting in the extraordinarily low rate of 4.9 percent.

At the end of the year, the total outstanding debt of the Authority was $107,158,000, made up of $100,000,000 First Series Revenue bonds and $7,158,000 Refunding Bridge bonds due June 1, 1966.

Gross receipts for 1955 were $9,362,241.34, an increase of $238,495.66 over 1954. Operating expenses totaled $1,679,525.53, a reduction of $120,573.35 from 1954. Income on investments and bank balances was $1,914,925.05, a decrease of $1,040,790.44. Interest payments on the 1946 Refunding Bridge bonds and on the 1953 First Series Revenue bonds totaled $3,466,968.02.

Port development expenses of $216,996.94 left net revenue for the year before $62,200 non-operating adjustments of $5,913,675.90. Port expenses in 1954 were $227,734.19, and the net revenue for that year was $6,627,260.90, reflecting a decrease of $651,385. The first maturity of $600,000 on the $100,000,000 First Series Revenue bonds will become due on December 15, 1957, to be followed on December 15, 1958, with a maturity of $900,000.

THE SOUTHERN NEW JERSEY MASS TRANSPORTATION SURVEY

It is a source of regret to the Authority that the Southern New Jersey Mass Transportation Survey and Report, which initially was to have been delivered by Parsons, Brinckerhoff, Hall and Macdonald, the consulting engineers retained to make the survey, on October 19, 1955, will not now be received until the latter part of January, 1956.

While the members of the Authority were reluctant to accede to two requests for extension of time, two considerations dictated the advisability of such action. The first is that extension of time for delivery of the report by approximately three and one-half months will be without cost to the Authority over and above the original terms of the cost plus fixed fee contract, with a ceiling of $325,000. The second is that the Authority felt that the original conditions laid down should be adhered to rigidly. Foremost among these conditions is that, after the survey and report had been compiled, it should be submitted to a qualified investment banking house for feasibility analysis, and that a copy of this analysis should be appended to the report.

Walter S. Douglas, partner in the firm of Parsons, Brinckerhoff, Hall and Macdonald, indicated the firm's disinclination to present an incomplete report solely in the interest of time. In accepting that point of view, the Authority took the position that the large sum which is being expended and the concern of the residents of the Southern New Jersey area to whom mass transportation is a matter of acute interest compelled insistence upon a report which was final, complete and compresensive.

Following receipt of the report next month, there necessarily will be a lapse of a few weeks within which its contents can be digested and an appropriate recommendation prepared for submission to the Governors and the Legislatures of Pennsylvania and New Jersey.

The lapse of time will be no greater than necessary for intelligent consideration and action by the Authority.

THE PORT DEVELOPMENT DEPARTMENT AND PORT ACTIVITIES

The total water-borne commerce of the Delaware River Ports in 1955 achieved an all-time high of over 85,000,000 short tons of cargo.

While this and other statistics upon the ports' activity are preliminary and not official, there can be no question that the year was one of very rapid and, in some respects, even phenomenal growth. There also can be no room for doubt that only Philadelphia, of all the major ports of the Atlantic Coast, made such rapid progress.

The record of the Port Authority, its Port Development Department and the department's bureaus through the year was one written by alert, vigilant and aggressive concern for the health and welfare of the port.

It may be recalled that, in the preface to this report, it was noted that statistical analysis of the port's tonnage figures for 1954 indicated new revenue in the sum of over $613,000,000 was derived directly and exclusively in that year from activities of the port. It may now be said that, on the basis of 1955's water-borne commerce, the cash income was in excess of $650,000,000.

The significance of the rapid increase in the port's business in the post-World War II period is stated in a memorandum to the Director of the Port Development Department from the statistical and research section thus:

"Over the past five years, the increase in port business alone has been worth, on the average, an additional direct income of $50,000,000 a year to businessmen and workers in the Delaware River Port Area."

An even more startling comparison supplied by the statistical and research section is this:

The total commerce of the major North Atlantic ports exclusive of the Delaware River Ports—Boston, New York, Baltimore and Hampton Roads—actually decreased a half million tons or two-tenths of one percent, between 1948 and 1954. The official figures are 231,936,796 short tons (1948) and 231,468,620 short tons (1954).

In the same period, water-borne commerce of the Delaware River Ports increased from 57,000,000 tons in 1948 to 79,500,000 tons in 1954, or 39.5 percent. Inclusive of the estimated tonnage figures for last year, the increase since 1948 has been 49.1 percent.

It is worthy of note that just seven years ago next month—on January 26, 1949—the Delaware River Joint Commission delivered its master Port Improvement Plan report, with recommendations, to the Governors and Legislatures of the Comonwealth of Pennsylvania and the State of New Jersey; and on May 25, 1949, pursuant to that report, made an initial allocation of $100,000 for the establishment and maintenance of a "Port Promotion Bureau," now the Port Development Department.

Before entering upon a more detailed recital of the improvement and development of the Delaware River Port Area, it may be of interest to cite here some additional preliminary statistics on last year's port business.

In 1955, foreign water-borne commerce is estimated at 38,000,000 short tons—an increase of 15.5 percent over 1954, and of 129.2 percent over 1948;

The Delaware River Port maintained its position as the No. 1 import port of the United States last year, increasing its tonnage by 14 percent over 1954, and handling almost one-fourth of all of the incoming foreign cargo of the United States in 1955;

The great increase in 1955 import tonnage was in iron ore, up 62.4 percent over 1954 with a total of 7,860,000 short tons; but increases were recorded in general cargo (10 percent) and crude petroleum (6 percent);

Total exports for 1955 increased an estimated 31 percent over 1954 to 3,400,000 short tons, and the commodity list generally shared in this advance, including coal and grain ranging from 15 to 25 percent increases, and general cargo, 10 percent.

Such statistics speak for themselves, and it would unduly inflate this record to enter into a detailed exposition of the Port Department's activities under the unflagging support of the commissioners of this Authority. Much of this work—in the office of the Traffic Manager, in statistical and research activities, in the Port Solicitation Bureau operating through our offices in New York, Pittsburgh and Chicago and in promotion—is and properly should be regarded as routine. This routine, nonetheless, was marked by initiative and vigilance in the port's interest and by an intimate coordination with the policy-forming activities of the Authority itself.

Broadly speaking, major activities in pursuance of the directive of the interestate compact legislation—i.e., "the promotion as a highway of commerce of the Delaware River"—fell into five principal groupings: They were:

1. Active prosecution of rate cases in the interest of commerce of the Delaware River Port Area, including continued, successful prosecution of two—the so-called "Iron Ore Rate Case" and "Pier Arbitraries", vitally affiecting motor carriers.

2. An actively-pursued campaign to prevent the Philadelphia Tidewater Terminal—Piers 96, 98 and 100, South—from being diverted to a non-port use as a result of its disposal as surplus to the needs of the Department of the Army.

3. Continued support, consitently maintained for the past five years, of the project for deepening the channel of the Delaware River from the Philadelphia Naval Base to the upper end of Newbold Island.

4. Solicitation of business for the Delaware River Ports through acticity of the Port Solicitation Bureau, in which operation of the three field offices is coordinated through headquarters in Camden.

5. A promotional and advertising campaign, marked during the year just ended by highly-successful employment of English, Spanish and Italian versions of the most recent port promotion color film, "Delaware River—Port of Opportunity."

The so-called "Iron Ore Rate Case"—I.&S. 6074 on the docket of the Interstate Commerce Commission—is a hardy perennial in this record. The Port Authority formally notified the Attorneys General of Pennsylvania and New Jersey of its intention to intervene in this very important matter in February, 1953, and at year's end, almost two years later, our intervention had all but won triumphant final consummation. Essentially, the Authority's position has been that there should be a parity in rail freight rates on iron ore imported through the port of Philadelphia and Baltimore and destined for steel producers in Central Freight Association territory—that is, Wheeling, West Virginia, and Steubenville and Youngstown, Ohio. The now existing rates, which became effective on February 19, 1954, in part at least as a result of active representations made by Port Authority counsel, provide a rate parity between Philadelphia and Baltimore to points in the Wheeling, W. Va., and Steubenville and Youngstown, Ohio, steel producing areas. No rates were prescribed for New York and Boston because among other things neither presently has facilities for the discharge of ore to rail from ship-side.

In July, after a further hearing which resulted from petitions of the Baltimore, New York and Boston interests, the proposed report of an I.C.C. Examiner held that the parity rates to Philadelphia are "just and reasonable." The report also proposed rates from New York and Boston to the Youngstown area 30 cent per gross ton higher than the rates from Baltimore and Philadelphia. On October 3, port interests in Baltimore, New York and Boston filed vigorous exceptions to the Examiner's proposed report to which the Port Authority replied on November 10, and there the matter rests, at the moment. We shall exercise the utmost vigilance to protect the interest of our port.

The so-called "Pier Arbitraries Case"—MC-C-1646 on the I.C.C. docket—had reached an equally satisfactory status as the year closed. The Port Authority, upon the recommendation of the Director of the Port Development Department and its Traffic Bureau, presented testimony last March 15 before the I.C.C. urging removal of presently applicable charges on motor traffic moving via the piers to and from points outside the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and the State of New Jersey.

On October 4, an examiner's proposed report found that these charges, commonly known as "pier arbitraries," are not just and reasonable and should be cancelled. Action by the full commission on the report is pending.

The action with the most significant and long-range implications was taken by the Authority at its last meeting of the year on December 21, when it directed that the Attorneys General of the two states be notified (in accordance with Aritcle I (i) of the interestate compact legislation) of intention to intervene in what for the purpose of this report may be called the "Port Differential Case."

About the middle of December, there were published reports of the intention of the ports of New York and Boston to fight for the removal of the differential in railroad rates for water-borne commerce which has given recognition to the geographical advantage of the Delaware River Port for many years. There could be little doubt, as a study made by the Port Development Department quickly established, that this move to secure equalization of rail rates was in part at least prompted, particularly on the part of New York port interests, by concern over the phenomental growth of this port area.

The analysis disclosed that from 1952 through November, 1955, Philadelphia's share of export of carloads of freight moving through Atlantic ports increased from 18,208 cars, or 5.9 percent, to 27,783 cars, or 10.1 percent of the total. In the same period, New York's share decreased from 69.9 percent of the total to exactly 60 percent. The exports in each instance excluded coal and grain.

It may be that the action of Boston and New York will detonate a long expected showdown battle before the Interstate Commerce Commission not only upon the question of the port differential rates per se, but also upon a question which maritime interests of the Delaware Valley long have felt needed scrutiny—namely, the question of free lighterage in the Port of New York.

At this juncture, the ultimate course of the litigation cannot be forecast, nor the avenues which it may pursue. The one completely predictable fact is that this Port Authority will defend the interest of the Port Area.

An example of the type of activity below the level of active intervention by formal action was demonstrated in the late spring in a matter involving the rail freight rates on manufacutred iron and steel articles from Fairless, Pennsylvania, to Philadelphia and Camden. The Port Development Department learned that is was the announced intention of the railroads involved to charge a differential over and above the ten cents per one hundred pounds charged for such freight to Fairless from Philadelphia for any shipments to Camden. This was a matter of important concern to shippers and pier operators in New Jersey, particularly to the South Jersey Port Commission. Although the Authority promptly authorized intervention on the pending rate publication before the Inter-State Commerce Commission, a series of conferences conducted by the Port Devedopment Department with the parties at interest resulted in establishment of parity rates for Philadelphia and Camden not only from Fairless, Pennsylvania, but also from all local producing points on both sides of the Delaware River including points as far away as Winchester, Va., and Williamsport, Pa. This amicable adjustment of a matter of substantial concern to the economy of South Jersey won expressions of gratitude from the Camden County Chamber of Commerce and the South Jersey Port Commission.

One month later, another subject of critical importance to the port came before the Authority for consideration. It was announcement that Piers 96, 98 and 100, South, known either as the Army Supply Base piers or the "Philadelphia Tidewater Terminal," had been declared surplus to the needs of the Department of the Army, and that the Armed Services Committees of the Congress would be requested to permit their disposal at public sale. On its face, the announcement was completely routine, representing no more than a proper desire of the Federal Government to divest itself of surplus properties. It was promptly recognized, however, that sale of the three piers, under certain circumstances, would be highly adverse to the general maritime interest. They are capable of berthing twelve ships at one time, and are being used by fifty steamship lines. An impressive share of the general cargo commerce of the port has moved over them. If the piers were to be disposed of at public sale to a purchaser intending to utilize them for non-port purposes, such as warehousing or for industrial uses, accommodations for receipt and dispatch of general cargo commerce within the Port of Philadelphia would be most seriously reduced.

This Authority promptly placed itself on record as opposing disposal of the properties for such purposes and authorized its appropriate officers to press the request before the Armed Services Committees of the Congress Communications were addressed to the chairmen of the committees, and to members of the Pennsylvania and New Jersey delegations representing the Port District. Unequivocal notice has been served upon all of the Federal agencies having connection with this matter of the Authority's concern.

It was further argued that the Army piers, presently under lease for general port activity, not only were constructed to meet the critical war shipping needs of the nation in 1917-18, but again played the same essential role during the emergency of 1941-45. It was argued that the terminal might well serve the interests of the national security in some future emergency, and that therefore extreme care should be exercised in proceeding with its disposal.

In company with some of the rate cases cited above, the matter has not reached final determination. It is high upon the list of those subjects which this Authority will hold under close scrutiny.

The history of the proposal for the deepening of the channel of the Delaware River from the Philadelphia Naval Base to Newbold Island had its ups and downs in the course of the year, ending finally with the failure of Congress to appropriate any funds. It is eloquent testimony to the vitality of the project that the all but unanimous support of the maritime, financial, commercial. political and civic interests of the Port Area was just as vigorous at the year's end as it had been in February, when Governor George M. Leader, of Pennsylvania, and Governor Robert B. Meyner, of New Jersey held breakfast conferences in Washington to discuss ways and means of expediting the project. Despite a last minute stamp of approval from the White House for a "token" $6,000,000 appropriation, the channel project was stricken from the bill by the House Appropriations Committee.

Every successive increase in the commerce of the Delaware River Port has confirmed the confidence of channel proponents that its eventual approval by the Congress may be anticipated, not merely as a matter of Congressional discretion but as a matter of blunt national necessity. A port which for two successive years has accommondated approximately one-fourth of all of the foreign water-borne commerce entering the United States now does and will continue to bespeak not only its own but the national interest in terms of its legitimate needs for expansion.

The three field offices of the Port Development Department's Port Solicitation Bureau were under steadily increasing pressure throughout the year to meet requests for information on traffic, port costs and availability of facilities. The number of instances when one office or the other was able to adjust difficulties for shippers, supply needed information, and provide useful services, literally were too numerous to mention other than by reference here. The day-by-day intimate coordination of activity and exchange of information between these offices and Camden headquarters often made it possible to serve a client of the Delaware River Port within a single business day.

The field offices, as well as the home area, made highly effective use of copies of the Authority's latest color film, "Delaware River—Port of Opportunity," while copies for foreign showings including the Spanish and Italian versions, enjoyed an almost phenomenal success. The Italian version was reviewed in Rome and exhibited throughout Italy, including the Milan trade fair. Copies of the Spanish version were supplied to the television section of the "Voice of American." Still other copies were supplied to the United States Information Agency and to the United States Department of Commerce. A Spanish print was loaned to the Government of Chile, and an English print to the U.S.I.A. for translation of its narrative into Hindi for use by the Calcutta Port Authority.

Through its advertising and publicity in the local and national press and in maritime and trade publications, the Port Authority during the year made the Delaware River Port a familiar and attractive region to the commercial and maritime interest literally of the entire civilized world.

In our report to you one year ago, we observed that "the interest and cooperation which has been manifested by the principal agencies and organizations interested in port promotional and development activities in the past year is a heartening augury of the future." The records of port commerce realized during the past year fully justify that confidence, and warrant its reiteration here. The Delaware River is, indeed, the "Port of Opportunity."

In April, Governor George M. Leader, of Pennsylvania, appointed Samuel B. Regalbuto, of Philadelphia, as a member of the Delaware River Port Authority for a term of five years, succeeding Joseph W. Henderson, Esquire, of Philadelphia. Mr. Regalbuto's nomination was confirmed unanimously by the Senate of Pennsylvania on May 2, 1955.

As we stated in our preface, the year 1955 in the history of this Authority was one of monumental projects carried forward and of new ones launched. Our report has essayed to enumerate these activities with some suggestion as to their relative significance and the measure of their benefit to the people of the Delaware Valley. The necessarily brief, at times, seeminglyy cursory, references herein contained will be found amplified in detail in the appendices.

But if these pages are to have any importance beyond a mere nominal compliance with our basic law that we report upon and account for our actions, they must point to one overriding conclusion.

This area, by whatever title it is identified—the Port District, the Delaware River Port Area, Delaware Valley or any other that is applicable—is in the grip of dynamic forces of growth and expansion. Some of these forces are well understood and time-tested measures for dealing with them already are in play. Others are new. They have both their challenges and their frustrations. Their solution will be achieved, in our judgment, by the exertion of no single agency of government or private enterprise, no matter how knowledgeable or resourceful. Solutions will depend upon the interplay of many interests, the application of bold and imaginative thinking and prudent and responsible action at every level of our social and business economy.

The members of this Authority willingly and eagerly pledge their best and most reflective effort to that end. We most respectfully solicit from your honorable bodies, jointly and severally, any suggestions which may assist us in the effectuation of our fundamental obligation, so clearly stated in the compact, that our actions, in all respects, shall be "for the benefit of the people of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and the State of New Jersey, for the increase of their commerce and prosperity and for the improvement of their health and living conditions."

Respectfully submitted,

We have examined the balance sheet of Delaware River Port Authority as of December 31, 1955, the statement of revenues and expenses for the year then ended and related supporting statements. Our examination was made in accordance with generally accepted auditing standards, and accordingly included such tests of the accounting records and such other auditing procedures as we considered necessary in the circumstances.

Because the accounts for tolls, rentals and operating, expenses are maintained on the cash basis, the accompanying statements do not reflect prepayments and accruals of certain relatively minor items. Otherwise the accounting is maintained on the accrual basis.

Subject to the preceding paragraph, it is our opinion, that the accompanying balance sheet, statement of revenues and expenses and supporting related statements fairly present the financial position of the Delaware River Port Authority at December 31, 1955 and the results of operations for the twelve months then ended, in conformity with acceptable accounting principles consistently applied.

DELAWARE RIVER JOINT TOLL BRIDGE COMMISSION
Administration Building
Morrisville, Pa.

March 1, 1955

To the Honorable George M. Leader, Governor, and the Legislature of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania:
To the Honorable Robert B. Meyner, Governor, and the Legislature of the State of New Jersey:

Delaware River Joint Toll Bridge Commission submits herewith its 1954 Annual Report detailing its operations in accordance with the legislative mandates of the two States.

Experience during 1954 justified the construction program of providing safe, adequate and modern high-speed transportation facilities across the Delaware River within the Commission's jurisdiction. It is anticipated that the steadily increasing flow of interstate traffic will create materially greater demands for the use of the toll bridges. The Commission is confident that these facilities will advance the peacetime interests of the two States as well as serve properly the national interests in time of emergency.

We invite a review of the detailed operations of the Commission during 1954 as set forth on the following pages.

Respectfully submitted,

ALEXANDER R. MILLER,
Chairman

INTRODUCTION

Delaware River Joint Toll Bridge Commission is a body corporate and politic created by compact signed by the Governors of Pennsylvania and New Jersey in December of 1934 pursuant to statutory authority from the Legislatures of those two States, approved by the Congress of the United States on August 30, 1935.

The Commission fulfills a dual function.

The first function of the Commission is to maintain and operate certain joint State-owned bridges crossing the Delaware River. The Commission is the successor to the "joint commission for the acquisition of the various toll bridges over the Delaware River, between the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and the State of New Jersey" which came into being by reason of a 1912 New Jersey statute and 1913 Pennsylvania legislation. Sixteen bridges were acquired through the agency of this "joint commission" from private owners, freed of tolls, and thereafter maintained and operated with public funds provided by the Legislatures. Delaware River Joint Toll Bridge Commission succeeded to the powers and duties of that joint commission. The free bridge budget of the Commission is approved by the fiscal officers of New Jersey. Funds provided for thereunder are paid to the Commission by New Jersey, which State is reimbursed by Pennsylvania, to the extent of one-half of the total of such expenditures Title to the free bridges remains in the two States. Twelve of the sixteen bridges originally acquired through the agency of the joint commission are still operated by the Joint Toll Bridge Commission. The covered bridge at Lumberville-Raven Rock, constructed in 1853 and acquired by the joint commission in 1932, was closed, for reasons of public safety, in 1945, and a new foot bridge erected at this location. The Upper Mt. Bethel-Delaware, the Portland-Columbia and the Milford-Montague structures were closed as an incident to the construction of new toll bridges, completed in 1953, at substantially the same locations. The old Portland-Columbia covered bridge now is used for foot traffic only. The Upper Mt. Bethel-Delaware Bridge and the Milford-Montague Bridge are closed to all traffic, but their final status is dependent on the outcome of certain litigation pending in the Federal Courts.

The second function of the Commission is to create, maintain and operate new and additional facilities, utilizing toll revenues and construction funds raised by revenue bonds. Five toll bridges have been constructed and are being maintained and operated by the Joint Toll Bridge Commission without utilizing the funds or credits of the two States.

The powers, duties and geographical jurisdicition of the Joint Toll Bridge Commission were enlarged and extended by supplemental compacts authorized by the Legislatures and executed by the Governors in 1947, in 1951 and in 1953. The 1947 and 1951 agreements were approved by the Congress, as is required by Article I, Section 10, Clause 3 of the Federal Constitution. The 1955 session of Congress will be asked to approved the 1953 compact.

Delaware River Joint Toll Bridge Commission presently has jurisdicition over the area extending from the Philadelphia-Bucks County line, in the south, to the New York State boundary, at the north. It owns, maintains and operates toll bridges at Trenton-Morrisville, Easton-Phillipsburg, Portland-Columbia, Delaware Water Gap and Milford-Montague. It maintains and operates twelve State-owned vehicular bridges and two foot bridges. When approved by Congress, the 1953 Supplemental Compact will empower the Commission to acquire, construct, maintain and operate port and terminal facilities for the handling, storage, loading and unloading of freight and passengers at steamship, railroad and motor terminals and airports within the counties of Bucks, Northampton, Monroe and Pike in Pennsylvania, and Sussex, Warren, Hunterdon and Mercer Counties and the northern part of Burlington County in New Jersey.

The plans and operations of the Commission at all times are co-ordinated with the Highway Departments of the two States. The first toll structure built by the Commission, the Bushkill Street Bridge connecting Easton and Phillipsburg, links the Pennsylvania and New Jersey sections of U.S. Route 22, an important east-west highway leading from New York City to Harrisburg and western points. The bypass through downtown Easton was constructed and paid for by the Commission. U. S. Route 1 crosses the Delaware River between Trenton and Morrisville by means of a toll bridge constructed and operated by Delaware River Joint Toll Bridge Commission. Congestion in Trenton is avoided by a Freeway constructed by the New Jersey Highway Department. Physical problems and heavy vacation traffic were eased by the construction of the Portland-Columbia and Delaware Water Gap Bridges, joined on the New Jersey side, by a Freeway built by the Highway Department of that State. The new Milford-Montague Bridge replaced a structure inadequate for modern traffic. [Pennsylvania Route 6 is presently under construction, so that this bridge will play a part in the program designed to facilitate travel to the northern tier of Pennsylvania Counties.]

Bonds totaling $29,500,000 were issued by the Commission for the construction of toll bridges and auxiliary facilities. First-Mechanics National Bank of Trenton, New Jersey acts as Trustee under the terms of the trust indenture providing for the issue of these bonds. Lybrand, Ross Bros. & Montgomery, Certified Public Accountants, audit the fiscal records of the Commission relating to toll operations.

Proceedings for an injunction against the closing of the Upper Mt. Bethel Township-Delaware Bridge were instituted by residents of the area in the District Court of the United States for New Jersey, at Trenton. Chief Judge Forman of that Court on March 22, 1954, by an opinion reported in 120 F. Supp. 337, dismissed the Plaintiffs' Complaint, permitted the Commission to close the bridge, but granted a stay of demolition pending appeal. The United States Court of Appeals for the Third District, sitting at Philadelphia, affirmed the decision of the District Court in an opinion written by Circuit Judge Goodrich (Judges Kalodner and Hastie concurring) filed November 17, 1954, to No. 11,339. On February 14, 1955, the Supreme Court of the United States denied the petition for writ of certiorari which had been presented by plaintiffs, thereby refusing to review the decisions of the lower courts. A petition by plaintiffs for rehearing was denied by the Supreme Court of the United States on March 28, 1955. A case involving the same issue, with respect to the Milford-Montague Bridge, was discontinued by stipulation of counsel.

ACTIVITIES OF THE COMMISSION

The Commission has had many new and varied duties during 1954. In December, 1953, the opening to traffic of three new toll bridges created increased responsibilities for both the administrative and engineering staffs. Additional personnel hired to operate these new facilities resulted in a staff increase of twenty-five per cent during the year.

Essential services to the traveling public who use the facilities have been maintained and new services have been developed. These services benefited not only the motorists but also the commercial and industrial trucking interests.

The Commission welcomed as a new member from New Jersey Edward W. Kilpatrick, who is Chief Engineer of the New Jersey State Highway Department.

To promote the use of the toll facilities by all groups of the traveling public, and to present to the public the Commission's viewpoint, there was established a Community Relations Program.

The Commission has consistently studied plans and programs for the future development of the area within its jurisdiction. To promote the best interests of the two States, the Commission held conferences with representatives of Federal, State, County and Municipal Governments, and with representatives of civic groups who conduct programs within the Delaware River area.

During the year, the Commission installed bronze plaques at the Milford-Montague, Delaware Water Gap and Portland-Columbia Toll Bridges commemorating their opening. At all five toll facilities flag poles were erected at each end of the bridges, so that the respective State flags may be flown daily.

ENGINEERING

The duties of the Engineering Staff are divided into three groups: Engineering and Planning; Operations; and Maintenance.

Under the direction of the Commission, the Engineering Staff is responsible, either directly or as a liaison between the Commission and its Consulting Engineers, for the design, construction, maintenance, and repair of Free and Toll Bridges, approach highways, buildings and incidental and related matters thereto. The staff conducts traffic surveys and studies so that the Commission may prepare a comprehensive program for the improvement of its present facilities. The studies also provide basic information necessary in planning for the future requirements of the evergrowing interstate travel.

The Commission formally opened its first training center at Milford, Pennsylvania, on October 1, 1954. This facility has been used to train the uniformed personnel and will be expanded to train other members of the staff as the needs of the Commission dictate. To those members of the uniformed personnel who completed the one-hundred-hour training course certificates were presented. The Commission has continued to encourage all members of the staff to pursue their extra-curricular educational activities.

Considered time was devoted by the Commission to the inspection and survey of all bridges and other facilities, and to the establishment of safety programs to protect the public and staff members. Several bridge shelters were modernized during the year so that the public would be better served.

Bids were received and contracts let by the Commission for the repainting of two of its Free Bridge facilities. A program was adopted for the painting of the bridges periodically.

The Commission participated in the Nation-wide Safety Drive conducted by President Dwight D. Eisenhower and a similiar drive headed by Governor Robert B. Meyner in New Jersey.

The Commission has actively supported all United States Savings Bond Drives and has encouraged the support of the employees.

Recognizing that many of the staff have direct contact with the public, the Commission has established and will continue an adequate health and welfare program.

Based upon the experiences of the past, the Commission anticipates and plans for the future and its responsibilities with confidence.

PERSONNEL

The Commission has continued its careful screening and selection of all personnel hired. Where necessary, special on-the-job instruction and training have been provided. In addition to this, the Commission established a resident training school during the fall for all uniformed employees of the Commission at our administrative center at Milford, Pennsylvania. During the year all Commission employees were given a thorough medical examination. Several persons were recommended for retirement as a result of these examinations. In those cases where medical disabilities were found which required corrective treatment, the employee were informed by letter of the medical examiner's findings, and was directed to consult his family physician.

Loss of time due to sickness and accidents has been kept at a minimum as a result of these medical examinations and a careful policy established in setting up safety regulations for our maintenance forces.

All eligible personnel are now enrolled in the State Retirement System of Pennsylvania or the State Retirement System of New Jersey. All new employees must become members upon entering the service. Through these plans, they may obtain retirement benefits up to one-half of a year's salary upon retirement after twenty-five and thirty years of service respectively, and attaining age sixty. Employees are also offered, through the salary deduction plan, membership in the Blue Cross-Blue Shield plans offered by Pennsylvania and New Jersey agencies. They are also offered the opportunity of purchasing United States Savings Bonds through salary deductions.

The Commission is continually working to make working conditions and opportunities for advancement more favorable and comparable to private industry and progressive public agencies. There were 295 members of the Commission staff at the end of the year 1954.

COMMUNITY RELATIONS

During the year, the Commission, by direct mail and personal solicitation, publicized the Commission's toll structures and services to representatives of Automobile Clubs, Motor Bus Companies and Associations, Motor Truckers and Associations, and Travel Bureaus (independent and company-operated) and Associations. The mailing lists are composed of approximately 2,000 organizations that serve the motoring public and the transportation industries within the United States and Canada.

In order to service these organziations and the public properly, the Commission distributed a sectional Middle Atlantic States map, on which was designated all of its facilities. In addition, strip maps, indicating the major routes leading to each of the Commission's toll structures, were distributed. As a public service, the major highways connecting the Metropolitan New York-Northern New Jersey area with the mid-west were displayed on strip maps for distribution. As new highways and improvements in the area of the Commission's jurisdiction were completed within the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and the State of New Jersey, strip maps depicting those improvements were distributed. In all instances, the distributions were made upon a nation-wide basis.

To promote the use of the Commission's toll facilities, vigorous advertising media were employed during the year. Roadside advertising signs were erected adjacent to the major highways in Pennsylvania and New Jersey. Roadside trail blazers were installed on highways leading to the toll bridges. Advertising campaigns were conducted in leading eastern newspapers whose readers were potential customers of the Commission's bridges. Special articles and general news release stories were prepared for the travel and industrial sections of daily, weekly, and Sunday papers. Material was prepared for use by radio broadcasters. Articles of special interest were submitted for use in Automobile Club's publications, and in trade papers of the trucking industry and motor bus associations. To supplement the advertising program, personal calls of solicitation were made upon representatives of industrial trucking concerns located in the Middle Atlantic States area.

ACCOUNTING

The Accounting Department is located at the Administration Building, Morrisville, Pennsylvania, and is under the direct supervision of the Controller of the Commission. This department is charged with the keepng of the financial, statistical and related data of the Commission for Toll and Free Bridges. Separate and distinct records are kept for Toll Bridges and for Free Bridges due to method of financing.

The Toll Bridges are operated from revenues received from tolls, under a budget approved by the Consulting Engineers and the Commission in accordance with the Trust Indentures covering the issuance of bonds, for the construction costs of such bridges.

Free Bridges are operated by budget approved by the State of New Jersey, of which the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania pays one-half.

Surplus Revenue of Toll Structures are transferred, each month, to Sinking Fund and Reserve Accounts, as prescribed by the Trust Indenture.

Statistical data as to revenues (when applicable) and traffic for all bridges of the Commission are prepared monthly and supplied to interested parties. Quarterly financial reports are submitted to persons having an interest in the bonds and operations of the Commission.

BRIDGE CROSSINGS

There are 21 bridge crossings over the Delaware River which are owned, operated, and maintained by the Commission. Of this total, 16 are free bridges and are described as follows:

Lower Trenton-Morrisville

This bridge connects Bridge Street in Trenton, New Jersey, with Bridge Street in the Borough of Morrisville, Pennsylvania. It is a steel structure, built in 1928 and 1929, and consists of five through truss spans. It has a total overall length of 1,021 feet and 7 inches. The bridge has two roadways—each 21 feet wide, curb to curb—separated by a center truss. The roadways are paved with sheet asphalt, and allow four lanes of traffic; two in each direction. Truck traffic is limited to vehicles not over 15 tons gross weight.

The bridge structure itself, while relatively new, is supported upon 4 piers and 2 abutments, all of stone ashlar masonry, parts of which were built in 1803 as a part of the original bridge which stood at this site. The present bridge, constructed in 1928 and 1929, replaced an old obsolete wrought iron through truss bridge which was purchased by the Commission from the Trenton-Delaware Bridge Company, and freed of tolls on July 12, 1918. The total purchase price was $240,000.00.

The Lower Trenton-Morrisville Bridge carried a total volume of 7,655,980 cars and trucks during the calendar year of 1954, and was the second heaviest traveled crossing.

Trenton-Morrisville Calhoun Street

This bridge connects Calhoun Street in Trenton, New Jersey, with Trenton Avenue in the Borough of Morrisville, Pennsylvania. Geographically it crosses the Delaware River approximately a mile north of the Lower Trenton-Morrisville Bridge. The present structure is of a type now considered obsolete. It consists of seven through truss spans and has a total overall length of 1,273 feet and 3 inches. It was built in the year 1884 and has been in service for 70 years. It carries a roadway deck, 18 feet 4 inches wide, curb to curb, constructed of steel open grating, of most modern type. This new type floor was installed in 1949.

The bridge structure is supported upon 6 piers and 2 abutments, all built of stone masonry in the year 1860. The present structure replaced an old covered wooden bridge which was destroyed by fire.

The Calhoun Street Bridge was purchased by the Commission from the Trenton City Bridge Company at a total cost of $250,000.00, on November 14, 1928, on which date it was freed of tolls.

This bridge carried a total volume of 5,148,173 cars and trucks, during the calendar year of 1954, and was the third heaviest traveled crossing.

The Calhoun Street Bridge is limited to the passage of vehicles weighing not over 6 tons gross weight.

Yardley-Wilburtha

This bridge crosses the Delaware River at a point approximately 4½ miles above the Lower Trenton-Morrisville Bridge. It connects with Route 29, in Wilburtha, New Jersey, and with Route 32, known as River Road and with Afton Avenue, in Yardley, Pennsylvania. Of very light construction, it was built in 1904, and carries only light-weight trucks and cars—having a gross weight of not over 6 tons.

The bridge consists of 6 through truss spans and has a total overall length of 902 feet and 9 inches. It has a roadway 16 feet 5 inches wide, curb to curb, constructed of steel open grating, installed in 1950. The bridge structure is supported upon 5 piers and 2 abutments, all of stone masonry, built in the year 1835. A timber and steel footwalk was added to the structure in 1928 to accommodate pedestrian travel.

The Yardley-Wilburtha Bridge was purchased from the Yardleyville Delaware Bridge Company, by the Commission, on December 21, 1922, for a total cost of $67,500.00. It was freed of tolls on that date.

The bridge carried a total volume of 2,109,417 cars and trucks during the calendar year of 1954—making it the fifth heaviest traveled bridge.

Washington Crossing

This bridge crosses the Delaware River at a point approximately 8¼ miles north of the Lower Trenton-Morrisville Bridge. It connects Washington Crossing in Pennsylvania with Washington Crossing in New Jersey. Built in 1904 the present bridge is too light to accommodate modern-day traffic, and is limited to the passage of cars and trucks having a gross weight of not over 6 tons. It was purchased from the Taylorsville Delaware Bridge Company by the Commission on April 25, 1922, for a total cost of $40,000.00. It was freed of tolls on that same date.

The bridge consists of 6 through steel truss spans supported upon 5 piers and 2 abutments, all of masonry construction, built in 1831. It carries a roadway only 15 feet wide, curb to curb. The roadway floor is of modern construction, of steel open grating, installed during 1951. The bridge has a total length, end to end, of 874 feet and 9 inches. A timber and steel footwalk was added to the bridge during 1926, for the protection of pedestrians.

A total count of 607,662 cars and light trucks crossed over the bridge during the calendar year of 1954—making it the ninth heaviest traveled bridge.

New Hope-Lambertville

This bridge is situated approximately 15 miles north of the Lower Trenton-Morrisville Bridge. It lies on U. S. Route 202 and connects the Borough of New Hope, Pennsylvania, with the City of Lambertville, New Jersey.

Built in 1904, the present structure is limited to the use of trucks having a gross weight of not over 12 tons. Of steel construction, it consists of 6 through spans and has a total overall length of 1,052 feet. It carries a roadway floor of open steel grating, installed in 1947. The roadway width is 20 feet 6 inches curb to curb.

The bridge itself is supported upon 5 piers and 2 abutments, all of stone masonry construction, built in 1814.

The present structure has been renovated and strengthened on several occasions since its purchase on December 31, 1919. It was acquired from the New Hope Delaware Bridge Company at a total purchase price of $225,000.00. It was freed of tolls on the above-mentioned date.

During the calendar year of 1954 a total of 3,474,000 cars and heavy trucks used the bridge—making it the fourth heaviest traveled structure.

Centre Bridge-Stockton

Located approximately 18½ miles above the Lower Trenton-Morrisville Bridge, the present crossing connects the community of Centre Bridge in Pennsylvania with the Town of Stockton in New Jersey. The present bridge stands upon the site of the old covered wooden bridge which was destroyed by fire. The remaining stone piers and other property of the Centre Bridge Company was purchased by the Commission on November 6, 1925, for a total cost of $10,000.00.

The present bridge was constructed and opened to traffic in 1927. It consists of 6 steel through spans over the Delaware River and a girder span over the Pennsylvania Division Canal. The main bridge is 823 feet long; the canal span 66 feet 6 inches. The bridge is of modern design, with a roadway 20 feet wide curb to curb. The piers which support the structure were built in 1814 and enlarged and encased in 1926.

The use of the bridge is restricted to cars and trucks weighing not over 15 tons gross. During the calendar year 1954 a total of 568,764 vehicles used the structure—making it the tenth heaviest traveled bridge.

Lumberville-Raven Rock

For pedestrian travel only, this structure connects the Town of Lumberville in Pennsylvania with the small community of Raven Rock in New Jersey. It is located approximately 22 miles north of the Lower Trenton-Morrisville Bridge. The present bridge is a 4½-span stiffened cable suspension bridge carrying a concrete walkway of prestressed concrete 8 feet wide. The bridge has a total overall length of 691 feet and 3 inches.

The present structure replaced an old covered wooden bridge constructed originally in 1853. This old structure was supported upon 4 piers and 2 abutments all of stone masonry. It was operated as a toll bridge and accommodated vehicles up to 2 tons gross weight. The entire structure was purchased by the Commission from the Lumberville Delaware Bridge Company for $25,000.00 on July 21, 1932 and freed of tolls.

In June of 1945, for reasons of public safety, the old wooden bridge was condemned as unsafe and closed to all traffic. The present structure was completed in 1947.

Vehicles are not permitted to use this bridge.

Point Pleasant-Byram

Located approximately 24 miles north of the Lower Trenton-Morrisville Bridge, this structure connects the Town of Point Pleasant in Pennsylvania with the community of Byram in New Jersey.

One span of the present bridge is part of a previous bridge constructed in 1894, and is the only span that survived the flood of October 10, 1903. The other 4 spans were rebuilt in 1904. The total length of the crossing is 895 feet and 1 inch overall. The roadway floor is of wood construction recently renewed. It has a width of 14 feet 6 inches curb to curb.

The bridge is supported on 4 piers and 2 abutments all constructed of stone masonry in the year 1854.

The present bridge was purchased from the Point Pleasant Delaware Bridge Company on January 6, 1919 by the Commission for a total cost of $30,000.00 and freed of tolls on the same day.

A total of 75,991 vehicles, cars and light trucks crossed the bridge during the calendar year of 1954—making it the twelfth heaviest traveled structure.

The Point Pleasant-Byram Bridge is restricted to the passage of vehicles weighing not over 6 tons gross weight.

Uhlertown-Frenchtown

This bridge is located approximately 31 miles north of the Lower Trenton-Morrisville Bridge. It connects Uhlertown in Pennsylvania and Frenchtown in New Jersey.

The present structure stands on the site of an old covered wooden bridge which was purchased by the Commission from the Alexandria Delaware Bridge Company on June 28, 1929, for $45,000.00. It was freed of tolls on the same day. The old structure consisted of 4 wooden spans built originally in 1843 and 2 steel spans built in 1905.

Built in 1931 the present bridge consists of 6 through steel truss spans having a total overall length of 953 feet and 4 inches. It has a roadway floor of open grating steel construction with a clear width of 16 feet 6 inches curb to curb. This open grating roadway floor was installed in 1949.

The present bridge is supported upon 5 piers and 2 abutments, all built of stone masonry in 1843.

During the calendar year of 1954 a total of 500,310 cars and trucks used the bridge—making it the eleventh heaviest traveled crossing. The bridge is limited to the use of vehicles weighing not over 15 tons gross weight.

Upper Black Eddy-Milford

This bridge connects Upper Black Eddy on the Pennsylvania side with Milford on the New Jersey side of the Delaware River. It is located approximately 33½ miles north of the Lower Trenton-Morrisville Bridge.

Built in 1933, the present structure consists of 3 steel through spans and has a total overall length of 666 feet and 9 inches. It carries a concrete filled steel grid roadway floor having a clear width of 20 feet between curbs. The bridge is supported upon 2 piers and 2 abutments, all constructed of stone masonry in 1842.

The present structure replaced an old 3-span covered wooden bridge built in 1843 and purchased by the Commission for $45,000.00 from the Milford-Delaware Bridge Company on June 28, 1929, on which day it was freed of tolls. The present bridge is limited to the passage of vehicles weighing not over 15 tons gross.

A total of 761,217 vehicles used the structure during the calendar years of 1954—making it the seventh heaviest traveled crossing.

Riegelsville-Riegelsville

Located approximately 41½ miles north of the Lower Trenton-Morrisville Bridge this bridge connects the Town of Riegelsville in Pennsylvania with the Town of Riegelsville, New Jersey.

The present bridge, which was built in 1904, was purchased from the Riegelsville Delaware Bridge Company for $50,000.00 by the Commission on January 4, 1923, and freed of tolls on the same day.

The structure is a 3-span suspension type bridge having a total length of 585 feet overall. The roadway floor is of wood construction with a clear width of 16 feet between curbs. This floor was renewed in 1949.

Two piers and 2 abutments support the bridge. One of the piers and both the abutments are built of stone masonry dating back to 1835. The other pier is of concrete construction built in 1936 to replace a pier damaged by the flood of that year.

During the calendar year of 1954 a total of 691,898 vehicles used the bridge—making it the eighth heaviest traveled crossing.

The Riegelsville Bridge is limited to the passage of vehicles not over 10 tons gross weight.

Easton-Phillipsburg Northampton Street

The Northampton Street Bridge, by which name the bridge is generally known, connects Union Square in Phillipsburg, New Jersey with Northampton Street in Easton, Pennsylvania. It lies approximately 50 miles north of the Lower Trenton-Morrisville Bridge.

The Commission purchased the present bridge on August 3, 1921, for $300,000.00 from the "President, Managers and Company for erecting a bridge over the Delaware River at the Borough of Easton" which was the incorporated name of the original owners of the structure. The bridge was freed of tolls on the same day.

The structure was built in 1895, is of the cantilever type of construction, and is supported upon 2 piers and 2 abutments. It has a total length overall of 550 feet. The center span is 300 feet in length; end spans each 125 feet long. Piers and abutments are constructed of hard limestone-faced masonry built in 1895.

The bridge roadway is 32 feet wide curb to curb and is paved with sheet asphalt laid in 1951. Two concrete paved footwalks provide safe walking spaces for pedestrians.

A total of 9,030,184 vehicles used the structure during the calendar year of 1954 making it the most heavily traveled structure. The bridge is limited to the passage of vehicles weighing not over 7 tons gross load.

Riverton-Belvidere

This bridge connecting the Town of Belvidere in New Jersey with the area known as Riverton, in Pennsylvania, is located approximately 64 miles north of the Lower Trenton-Morrisville Bridge. It was purchased by the Commission on June 14, 1929, for $60,000.00 from the Belvidere Delaware Bridge Company. It was freed of tolls on the same day.

Built in 1904, it consists of 4 through steel truss spans, and has a total overall length of 653 feet and 9 inches. It was strengthened in 1929 and also in 1947 at which time the old wooden roadway floor was replaced with a modern type open grating steel floor. A footwalk was added in 1931. The width of the roadway floor, curb to curb, is 16 feet.

The bridge is supported upon 3 piers and 1 abutment—all built of stone masonry in 1836, and 1 abutment built of concrete in 1922.

A total of 777,096 vehicles used the bridge during the calendar year of 1954 making it the sixth heaviest traveled crossing. The structure is limited to the passage of vehicles weighing not more than 8 tons gross.

Upper Mount Bethel-Delaware

This bridge was purchased by the Commission on February 8, 1932, for $275,000.00 from the Knowlton Turnpike and Bridge Company. It was freed of tolls on the same day. Located approximately 72 miles north of the Lower Trenton-Morrisville Bridge, it connects Delaware on the New Jersey side of the Delaware River with Upper Mount Bethel Township on the Pennsylvania side.

Built originally as a railroad bridge in 1890 it was later converted to highway use. It consists of 5 through steel truss spans and has a total length of 733 feet and 6 inches end to end. Two separate roadways, 1 eastbound and 1 westbound, are separated by a center truss system. Roadway widths are each 11 feet clear, curb to curb.

The structure is supported upon 4 piers and 2 abutments, all of stone masonry construction, probably built around 1853.

On April 9, 1954, this bridge was closed to all traffic.

Portland-Columbia

This bridge is a 4-span covered wooden structure built in 1869 and is now the last remaining covered wooden bridge over the Delaware River. It connects the Town of Columbia on the New Jersey side of the river with the Borough of Portland on the Pennsylvania side and is located approximately 74 miles north of the Lower Trenton-Morrisville Bridge.

It was purchased by the Commission on May 2, 1927, for $50,250.00 from the Columbia Delaware Bridge Company. It was freed of tolls on the same day. The total length of the bridge overall is 775 feet. It has a roadway width of 16 feet 4 inches clear between bowstrings.

Three piers and 2 abutments, all built of stone masonry in 1839, support the covered wooden spans. On December 1, 1953, this bridge was closed to all vehicular traffic and is now used as a pedestrian crossing only.

Milford-Montague

Located approximately 113 miles north of the Lower Trenton-Morrisville Bridge and about 8 miles south of Port Jervis, New York, this bridge connects the Town of Milford, in Pike County, Pennsylvania with Montague Township, in Sussex County, New Jersey.

The bridge was purchased by the Commission on April 25, 1922, for $31,500.00 from the "President, Managers and Company for erecting a bridge over the Delaware River near Milford, Pennsylvania" which was the name of the original owners. It is a 3-span steel through structure built in 1889. It has a total overall length of 553 feet. The roadway deck is of wood construction with a width of only 13 feet and 11 inches curb to curb.

The bridge is supported upon 2 piers and 2 abutments, all of stone masonry construction, built around the year 1840. The bridge was abandoned and closed to all traffic on December 30, 1953.

HISTORY OF THE FREE BRIDGES OPERATED AND MAINTAINED BY THE COMMISSION

LOWER TRENTON BRIDGE

The first bridge to span the Delaware River was completed and opened to traffic on January 30, 1806. The bridge connected Trenton, New Jersey, with Moorisville, Pennsylvania, and was located on the same site as the present Lower Trenton-Morrisville Bridge. Prior to the opening of the bridge, travel across the river was by means of ferry. This mode of travel was uncertain due to flood and ice stages and frequently resulted in travel being delayed for weeks at a time.

The need for the bridge, its conception, design, construction and early history is very well told in an article appearing on pages 275 to 280 of Volume 1 of the book entitled "A History of Trenton 1679-1929", published by the Trenton Historical Society. This article is reprinted herein with the permission of the Society.

FIRST BRIDGE OVER THE DELAWARE

On March 3, 1798, the New Jersey Legislature, in view of the fact that "a good and permanent bridge across the river Delaware . . . would greately contribute to facilitate the intercourse between this State and the Southern States," authorized John Beatty, Peter Gordon and Aaron Howell, all of Trenton, and Philip Wagner, James C. Fisher and Charles Biddle, of Philadelphia, to act as subscription commissioners for the stock of the first bridge across the Delaware at Trenton. Pennsylvania passed similar legislation on April 4 of the same year. The charter was granted by New Jersey on August 16, 1803, Pennsylvania granting like privilges. The building of the bridge was begun in May, 1804, and since it did not seem, for a while, that the bridge would be finshed within the time limited by the charter, the time for completing the bridge was extended to March 3, 1812, by a supplementary Act passed in Pennsylvania on April 2, 1804, New Jersey passed concurrent legislation. The bridge was finished and opened for travel on January 30, 1806. The construction had cost $180,000.

Theodore Burr designed and built the bridge, and General John Beatty was president of the bridge company. The opening of the bridge was the occasion of a gala celebration and elaborate exercise.[73] In its day the bridge was a nine days' wonder, travellers coming from all points to view this unique piece of engineering.

Description of the Bridge

The bridge was 1,008 feet long, from the Jersey abutment to the Pennsylvania one which rested on Delaware Works Island. Its width was 36 feet. The superstructure of the bridge consisted of five wooden arches, respectively 203, 198, 161, 186 and 203 feet in the clear, each composed of five great arched ribs rising from the chord in the proportion of 13 feet to 100. These ribs were made of four-inch pine planks, a foot wide and from 35 to 50 feet long, built up into a thick laminated rib, three feet wide. The relative placing of these ribs left two openings of 11 feet each in the center of the bridge for carriage ways, and two more, each 4 feet 6 inches wide, on the sides for footwalks. The ribs were spaced and bound together on the top circumference of the arches by ties and diagonal braces, fastened to the ribs by bolts and screws at intervals of 8 feet. The floor was suspended from the ties by perpendicular iron rods, securely fastened in the wood. Wing arches and diagonal braces were effectively used throughout to eliminate all motion between the parts of the bridge, thus making it a rigid and solid structure.

The entire bridge was covered by a roof of cedar shingles and was enclosed at each end. Originally there were high and elaborate fronts, both on the New Jersey and the Pennsylvania ends of the bridge, with great arched doorways over the carriageways and footwalks. Balustrades four feet high ran along the whole length of the bridge, outside of the footwalks, to protect the pedestrians.

The bridge rested upon the abutments and four piers, all of stone. The piers were made about one-fourth higher than they had originally been planned. Those who designed the bridge supposed that the original piers would be high enough so that no flood would ever reach the top, but before the framework ever went up the river river rose so high as to cover both the abutments and piers. The piers were immediately raised, and it is because of this precaution that the bridge was not swept away in the 1841 freshet which destroyed five bridges over the Delaware above Trenton. The ends of the piers up-stream were semicircular and, after rising five feet, gradually receded to the top, where they were finished off in a half-dome. These piers were 62 feet long and 20 feet deep; in 1876 they and the abutments were lengthened by the addition of 30 feet on the south end. In 1891 they were again lengthened. The present length is 113 feet. On each pier stood a barrel of water and buckets, to be used in case of fire.

Tolls Charged

Toll was charged to all vehicles and persons using the bridge. The charges were: for every pleasure carriage drawn four horses, 75¢, and if drawn by two horses, 50¢; for every stage wagon drawn by four horses, 61½¢, and by two horses, 37½¢; every loaded wagon drawn by four horses, 62½¢, and if empty, only 50¢. Every wagon drawn by two horses paid 37½¢ toll; two-wheel carriages drawn by two horses, 37½¢, and if drawn by one horse, 25¢. Sleighs and sleds paid 25¢; every single horse and rider, 12½¢, every led horse, the same; every foot passenger, 3¢; every head of mules or horned cattle, 6¢, and every sheep or swine, 1¢.

THE FIRST BRIDGE USED FOR INTERSTATE RAIDROAD TRAFFIC

The bridge in South Trenton is the first bridge in the United States to have been used in interstate railroad traffic. When trains drawn by locomotives first ran across the bridge, wagons were prohibited from going across the north wagon road. The rules of the bridge, until then, had been that all wagons using the bridge kept to the right. With only one wagon track left, the plan was adopted of giving the first wagon on the bridge the right of way across. A man stationed at each end of the bridge, who would, upon the approach of any vehicle, ring a bell at the other end by pulling a wire at his end. This would be a signal to the other attendant not to allow any vehicle to start across.

The plan proved cumbersome and inconvenient; on June 29, 1848 the bridge directors decided to build a track expressly for the crossing of trains. Thereupon the most southerly arch rib was moved five feet south of where it had been, on the same piers and abutments. At the same time, this rib and the one immediately next to it were strengthened by placing over them a larger and hevier rib. In constructing the separate track, the southern footway of the bridge had to be abandoned, but the north wagon road was restored and the difficulty in handling vehicles eliminated.

For fifteen years the bridge remained in this condition without change, when a fire occurred in the first span on the Jersey side which threatened the whole structure. The fire had been started by a spark from a passing locomotive and this led the bridge company to have the shingled roof of the bridge removed. The sheds and other enclosures on the bridge were removed at the same time.

As early as 1868 the bridge company realized that the old bridge would soon have to be abandoned. On March 10, of that year application was made to the Legislature for authority to extend the piers. Nothing seems to have been done, however, until 1874, when the railroad company decided to build a new iron bridge sufficient to carry two tracks. The old bridge had been the subject of much complaint, many people having expressed the fear of a serious accident happening when a reavy train pasesed over. In fact, accidents on the driveways had been frequent, for the bridge had been neglected so long that wagons often broke through the rotten flooring.

The additions to the piers and abutments, to allow for an iron bridge bearing two tracks, were completed in July, 1874. Work on the iron frame began in December, and the last span connecting with the Jersey shore was in place by August, 1875. The wagon ways of the old bridge were closed in December and the slow work in dismantling the rotten and rusted bridge began. The piers and abutments were than raised four feet and the iron bridge moved to its permanent site, 18 feet north of where it had been built. This was done early in 1876. There was a footway at the southern end of the bridge; wagons had to use the Calhoun Street bridge until an iron span to accommodate them could be built north of the railroad bridge which had just been put in place. The wagon bridge, made of iron, was erected in 1876. Joseph A. Wilson, a noted engineer of that time, designed the bridges and the Keystone Bridge Company of Pittsburgh built them. The bridge company granted the use of the railroal tracks upon the southern span to the Philadelphia and Trenton Railroad for a term ending in 1870, and in June of the same year this contract was assigned to the Pennsylvania Railroad Company.[74]

NEW STEEL BRIDGE BUILT

In 1891, a new steel bridge was built just north of the iron railroad span, resting partly on piers and abutments newly built and partly on the piers and abutments built back in 1874. The American Bridge Company constructed the bridge at their local plant. The bridge accommodated four tracks. In 1898 the railroad span of the old iron bridge, built in 1875, was taken down and replaced by a steel bridge, also a four-track affair, built by the American Bridge Company. In 1908, after the Pennsylvania Railroad Company had opened its new stone railroad bridge a few hundred yards south of the old bridge, the two steel bridges (built in 1892 and 1898) were taken down and shipped south, where they now span the Potomac at Washington. The stone railroad bridge had eighteen stone arches, four of them at each end for approaches and ten spanning the channel.

The iron bridge, built in 1876 and used for foot and carriage traffic, continued to stand. It was a toll bridge until July 12, 1918, when it was taken over by the Joint Commission for Eliminating Toll Bridges, at a price of $240,000. Its five iron spans, varying from 166 to 208 feet in length and providing a roadway 20 feet wide, were considered unsafe. Though the flooring had been rebuilt by the joint commission during the latter part of 1921 and the spring of 1922, the bridge was still unsuitable for the heavy motortruck traffic which passed over it. Accordingly, during 1928 the joint commission built a new steel bridge on the piers of the railroad bridge which used to stand immediately south of the toll bridge, after some changes in the masonry of the piers and abutments had been made. The bridge has a double roadway with an aggregate width of 42 feet, and a sidewalk on the north side. The bridge, whose cost is estimated at $650,000, is called the Lincoln Highway Bridge, after the highway which passes over it. This highway connects San Francisco and New York. At Trenton it begins at the bridge, turns into Warren Street and proceeds to the Battle Monument, where it follows the line of Princeton Avenue. The old bridge was dismantled in 1929.

THE MORRISVILLE, PENNSYLVANIA-TRENTON, NEW JERSEY (Calhoun Street) BRIDGE

A second bridge was constructed over the Delaware River to connect Trenton, New Jersey with Morrisville, [74] See Trenton Sunday Times-Advertiser, February 18, 1917.

Pennsylvania by the Trenton City Bridge Company on the site of the present Calhoun Street Bridge. It was built near the site of an old ferry known as the Kirkbride-Rutherford Ferry. Ever since the opening of the first bridge at Trenton, it was felt that a second structure was necessary. Action for the structure was started in 1840 with the passage of legislation on the part of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania creating the Trenton City Bridge Company. A similar act was passed by the New Jersey Legislature on March 8, 1842.

The movement lay dormant until 1847, when it was given new impetus by the passage of supplementary legislation, permitting the bridge to be constructed at any point opposite Trenton. Once again the movement bogged down and little was accomplished until the year 1859.

New commissioners were appointed by both States during the winter of 1859 and the movement was again under way. The movement gained momentum and it was finally decided to start construction.

A meeting was held by the stockholders in the American Hotel in Trenton, New Jersey, on August 30, 1859. The site of the bridge was determined at this meeting. The site selected was at the foot of Calhoun Street.

Work was begun early in October of 1859. The City Bridge, as it was called, was 1,274 feet long constructed of wood throughout. It consisted of seven spans supported on stone masonry piers and abutments, which are today supporting the present iron bridge. The superstructure carried two roadways and two sidewalks and was a covered structure. It was built to clear the surface of the water in the river at its highest stage and this precaution saved the structure from destruction on more than one occasion.

The bridge was completed sufficiently to open it to traffic on July 1, 1861. An article written in the Daily Free American on July 4, 1861, carried the following statement:

> "The new bridge across the Delaware River thrown open, in accordance with previous notice, on Monday, on which day we learn that over 200 foot passengers and some hundred vehicles passed over it. The work on the bridge is not yet, however, complete, a part of the roof on the Pennsylvania End, and the outer railing on the west side, for a short distance, being unfinished. This will be done in a few days. The damage sustained by one or two of the piers is being repaired, and measures will be taken to prevent its recurrence."

The wooden bridge continued in service as a toll bridge for 23 years until the evening of June 25, 1884, when disaster struck. The bridge was completely destroyed in one of the most spectacular fires ever witnessed in this area. The fire, believed to have been caused by a carelessly dropped lighted cigar butt, was soon out of control and the bridge was completely destroyed.

The Trenton City Bridge Company decided to replace the bridge soon after it burned. It was replaced with an iron truss structure using the old piers and abutments, which were not damaged. The contract for the new bridge was given to the Phoenix Bridge Company of Phoenixville, Pennsylvania and the bridge was built in the short period of only 60 days, by 83 workmen, according to an article which appeared in the Daily State Gazette, on October 20, 1884.

The bridge which is the same structure standing on the site today, was opened to traffic on October 20, 1884. The Gazette of that day stated that 16 two horse vehicles, 7 one horse vehicles and 175 pedestrians crossed over the bridge on the first day.

On November 14, 1928, the bridge was purchased by the Joint Commission for Eliminating Toll Bridges for the price of $250,000.00, and freed of tolls. Since its purchase, the Commission has remodelled once and refloored it three times, once in 1928, once in 1940 and again in 1949 at which time the old wood floor was replaced with a modern open grating steel floor.

At the time the bridge was purchased, a trolley line was being operated over it by the Pennsylvania and New Jersey Traction Company. This line continued to operate for a few years but was finally abandoned and the tracks removed as part of the repairs and reflooring done during the year 1940.

At present the bridge is posted for a gross load capacity of only 6 tons.

THE YARDLEY, PENNSYLVANIA-WILBURTHA, NEW JERSEY BRIDGE

The first bridge to cross the Delaware River at Yardley, Pennsylvania and Wilburtha, New Jersey was constructed by the Yardleyville Delaware Bridge Company, incorporated by an act of the New Jersey Legislature on March 2, 1835, and by a concurrent act on the part of the Pennsylvania Legislature on April 15, 1835.

The original bridge was erected about 1835 and consisted of four timber spans on masonry piers and abutments. According to certain records this bridge was washed away by the flood of October 10, 1903. An old history of Pennsylvania states however that all of the bridges over the Delaware River between Easton, Pennsylvania and Trenton, New Jersey were carried away or seriously damaged by the great flood of January 8, 1841, and that the Yardleyville Bridge suffered with the rest. If this is true, the structure which replaced the one destroyed in 1841 remained in service until the flood of October 10, 1903, when the timber superstructure was carried away and the masonry damaged.

Section 1 of the acts passed by both States provided for a capital stock of $20,000 with the right to increase the amount to $30,000; the par value of each share was $50. (At the time the present bridge was purchased by the two States the outstanding capital stock was $30,000, divided into 600 shares of $50 each.)

After the flood of October 10, 1903, a new steel structure was constructed in 1904 on the old masonry piers and abutments. This structure consisted of six spans, five spans over the Delaware River and one span over the Trenton Water Power Canal. The roadway was, and still is, only 16 feet wide and there was no footwalk.

This structure was purchased by the Joint Commission for Elimination of Toll Bridges, the forerunner of the present Commission, on December 21, 1922, for $67,500 and freed of tolls on the same day. Subsequent to purchase in 1924, the Commission overhauled the entire structure, installing a new timber roadway floor, overhead cross frames, new steel roadway stringers and some new floorbeams. New paving was installed on the approaches.

In 1928, some further remodeling was done on the structure, at which time a footwalk was added along the upstream side of the bridge. The bridge was refloored again in 1934.

In 1947, the old bridge house located at the Pennsylvania end of the bridge, which formerly served as the old tollhouse, was sold and moved by its purchaser, to a point about 300 feet further away, on Afton Avenue. The removal of the old bridge house, which was a hazard to traffic, gave the Commission a chance to improve the appearance of the entire approach. At this time, a new modern type officers' shelter was constructed for the convenience of the officers on duty. The entire Pennsylvania approach roadways were widened ,resulting in better traffic conditions.

In 1950, the timber roadway floor was removed and replaced with a modern type steel open grating floor.

The present Yardley Bridge is almost 50 years old, has a narrow roadway and according to present-day standards is obsolete.

THE WASHINGTON CROSSING, PENNSYLVANIA-WASHINGTON CROSSING, NEW JERSEY BRIDGE

The first bridge constructed at this location, connected Washington Crossing on the New Jersey side of the river with the Town of Taylorsville, now also called Washington Crossing, on the Pennsylvania side. On February 14, 1831, an act was passed by the New Jersey Legislature and concurred in by Legislature of Pennsylvania creating the Taylorsville Delaware Bridge Company. By the provisions of this act, the bridge was to be located at Taylor's Ferry, formerly know as McKonkey's Ferry.

Section 1 of the original charter provided for a capital stock of $20,000 divided into 400 shares of $50 each and that when 300 shares of the stock had been subscribed to, the company could organize and proceed to do business. This act also provided that no stockholder could vote more than 20 shares at any election; that a sinking fund should be provided to take care of the decay of the bridge, and, in addition, the company was prohibited from engaging in banking operations.

The first bridge was built of timber and remained in service until it was swept away by the freshet of January 8, 1841. At this time, the company appears to have issued promissory notes in the form of script for the purpose of obtaining sufficient funds to repair the loss occasioned by the flood. Records show that all script issued was redeemed by January 19, 1842.

The bridge as rebuilt remained in service until the superstructure was carried away by the flood of October 10, 1903, at which time the masonry was also damaged.

In 1904 the name of the company was changed to the "Taylorsville Delaware Bridge and Washington's Crossing Delaware Bridge Company." The authorized capital stock of the new company was $50,000. Of this total, $27,750 worth of stock was issued, which covered the cost of replacing portions of the bridge washed away by the flood, amounting to $26,776.25.

In 1904, the company built a six-span steel superstructure which still stands and is in service today. This bridge was purchased by the Joint Commission for Elimination of Toll Bridges, the forerunner of the present Commission, on April 25, 1922, for $40,000 and freed of tolls on the same day.

The Commission immediately after purchase, remodelled the structure in 1922-1923, installing a new timber roadway floor, adding new roadway stringers, railings, etc. In 1926, a new footwalk was added along the downstream side of the bridge for the safe passage of pedestrians.

In 1947 the New Jersey Approach was redesigned and repaved in an attempt to provide a better entrance to the bridge. At the same time, a new modern type officers' shelter was constructed for the convenience of the bridge officers.

In 1951, the Commission replaced the old wood roadway floor with a modern steel open grating floor, at which time the roadway was increased in width to 15 feet. At the same time the roadway floor was installed, the footwalk was relaid with new timber. The railings along the roadway were redesigned, cut down in height and moved back from the curbs in order to give traveling cars more side clearance.

The bridge is almost 50 years old and according to modern-day standards is obsolete. It is limited to the passage of vehciles not over six tons gross weight. The narrow roadway of only 15 feet requires one-way passage while trucks are crossing the structure. At such times traffic is controlled by means of traffic lights at each end of the bridge, operated manually by the bridge officer. State Parks located near each end of the bridge attract many thousands of tourists each year, many of whom cross the structure.

THE NEW HOPE, PENNSYLVANIA-LAMBERTVILLE, NEW JERSEY BRIDGE

The present New Hope-Lambertville Bridge connects the Borough of New Hope in Pennsylvania, with the City of Lambertville in New Jersey, and is the third bridge to span the Delaware River at this point. The original company was incorporated by a special act of the New Jersey Legislature on January 20, 1812, and by a concurring act on the part of the Pennsylvania Legislature on December 12 ,1812. The original act provided for an authorized capital stock of $50,000 divided into 1,000 shares of $50 each, with the provision that this amount could be increased to such a sum as might be deemed advisable, providing the amount specified should not be found sufficient to complete the bridge. This act authorized the company to operate under the title of "The President and Managers of the New Hope Delaware Bridge Company," and at the same time permitted the company to engage in banking operations.

The act contained the provision, common to all of the charters of the earlier bridges across the river, that three years after the completion of the bridge, the company should lay its acconuts before the Legislatures, and if it should appear that the net earnings were insufficient to produce a return of 6% upon the invested capital, then the tolls could be increased to such amounts as would produce this rate of return upon the invested capital. In addition the act provided that, at the end of ten years, the company should again render an account, and if it should appear that the net income on the invested capital would produce a dividend of more than 15%, the tolls should be reduced to such an extent that this amount would not be exceeded.

The company seems to have fallen into disrepute through its banking methods and bad fortune from floods.

It appears that in 1848, the company refused to redeem script which it had issued, and the Legislature of New Jersey appointed a committee to investigate its affairs.

Judging from the report of the investigating committee, the company's embarrassment at this time seems to have been partly due to loss sustained by the destruction of the greater protion of its bridge by the freshet of January 8, 1841, although faulty financial methods appear to have contributed. At all events, the legislative investigation resulted in the passage of an act under date of February 16, 1848, prohibiting the bridge company from continuing a banking business and issuing notes or other evidences of debt to be circulated as money.

On December 28, 1848, a mortgage was executed in favor of John Holcombe in the sum of $28,000 secured by the property of the bridge company. This mortgage was probably foreclosed, as the company appears to have become bankrupt and the ownership of the bridge seems to have remained in private hands for a long time.

On May 7, 1887, a new company was organized with a paid-up capital of $30,000, this amount being increased to $70,000 on September 15, 1898.

According to Theodore Cooper in his "American Railroad Bridges," the original structure was constructed in 1814 by Louis Wernwag, and consisted of six arch spans each 175 feet in length, the rise of each arch being 13 feet. Each span consisted of three arch ribs formed of four sticks of 6" x 15", dressed to the curve and confined by iron clamps and bolts. Wernwag's practice was to saw all his timbers through the heart to detect unsound wood and permit good seasoning of the timbers. He seems to have used no timbers of greater thickness than 6" and separated all the sticks of his arches by cast washers, to allow free circulation of air.

The records of the company state that the cost of constructing the original bridge was $67,936.37. The original bridge appears to have remained in service until the freshet of January 8, 1841, when it was carried away and damaged to the extent of $40,000. The bridge which replaced it was a wooden structure, which in turn was carried away by the flood of October 10, 1903, at which time the masonry substructure was also seriously damaged.

The present bridge, consisting of six through truss steel spans, was constructed in 1904 to replace the one carried away during the preceding year, and according to the records of the company, this bridge cost $63,818.81.

The present bridge was purchased by the Joint Commission for the Elimination of Toll Bridges, the forerunner of the present Commission, on December 31, 1919, for $225,000 and freed of tolls on the same day. Nothing was done to the bridge until 1923, at which time the bridge was generally remodelled, with a new wooden roadway floor being laid.

Along the northerly side of the roadway, the Trenton, New Hope and Lambertville Street Railway Company operated a trolley line. During the repairs of 1923, this railway line was removed.

In 1947, the condition of the wooden roadway floor became so bad that the Commission had to replace it with a new modern type open grating steel roadway floor. At the same time, the truss members were strengthened to increase the capacity of the bridge to 12-ton loading, and a new concrete floor was laid on the footwalk.

In 1949, the entire approach to the bridge in New Hope was repaved, at which time a concrete wall with guardrail was constructed to remove a dangerous traffic condition.

In 1950, a new officers' shelter was constructed at the New Hope end of the bridge for the convenience of the bridge officers.

In 1954, a new officers' shelter was constructed at the Lambertville end of the bridge.

The New Hope-Lambertville Bridge lies on U. S. Route 202, a very important and heavily traveled route to the West. Increased travel on U. S. Route 202 has subjected this bridge structure to loads greater than those for which the bridge was originally designed.

As a result of this increased heavy loading, it was found necessary to tighten several truss members during 1950 and to repair a broken truss member during 1952.

THE CENTRE BRIDGE, PENNSYLVANIA-STOCKTON, NEW JERSEY BRIDGE

On February 18, 1811, an act was passed by the Legislature of the State of New Jersey, providing for the creation of a company to build a bridge across the Delaware River connecting the Borough of Stockton, in Hunterdon County, with Solebury Township, in Bucks County, Pennsylvania. Concurrent legislation was passed by the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania on March 23 of the same year. The New Jersey act provided that when forty or more persons subscribed to four hundred shares of the stock and the commissioners had certified the names of the subscribers to the Governor of New Jersey, the latter was empowered to issue letters patent. Letters patent were accordingly issued by the then Governor, Joseph Bloomfield, on August 17, 1812, and the first meeting of the stockholders was held on October 21 of that year.

Records show that on December 24 of 1812, a contract was entered into with Captain Peleg Kingsley and Benjamin Lord for the construction of the first bridge over the Delaware River at this location. The same records state that a John Ruckman was appointed surveyor and that a John A. Bill was appointed toll collector, salary to begin on January 1, 1814. The bridge was completed and opened to traffic in the spring of the same year. During the winter of 1816 or 1817, a stone tollhouse was built by William Mitchell near the New Jersey end of the bridge in Sotckton, New Jersey. Old records seem to indicate that the bridge was repaired or "partly rebuilt" during the year 1829, as indicated by a contract between Amos Campbell and John Pew, then president of the company. The cost of these repairs seems to have been $10,725.

During the freshet of January 8, 1841, the highest on record up to that time, two piers and three spans were washed away. The damage was repaired by a Courtland Yardley for $4,200.

The site of the bridge was formerly known as Reading's Ferry, later purchased by Howell, taking his name. Howell's rights were subsequently purchased by the bridge company, the consideration being forty shares of stock. The construction of the bridge, which was a covered wooden structure, must have been exceptionally good, for it was the only bridge between Trenton and Easton not seriously damaged by the flood of October 10, 1903.

On the evening of July 22, 1923, disaster struck in the form of a fire, which completely demolished the structure. Fifteen firemen went down with the last span, several being badly injured; no deaths resulting.

The bridge which burned was a covered wooden structure, consisting of six spans. Trusses were of the latticed type known as the "Towne Truss." The trusses were strengthened by the addition of wooden arches strung between the piers and abutments. The entire structure was portected by a wooden shed-like covering. The bridge was 21.5 feet wide center to center of trusses, and 839.75 feet in length. At the Pennsylvania end of the main bridge there was a small span over the Delaware Division Canal. This span, about 70 feet long, was constructed with cast iron through trusses, and had a wooden floor.

The piers and abutments of the main river bridge were constructed of stone masonry resting upon timber cribs, protected by stone rip rap.

On November 6, 1925, all of the holdings of the Centre Bridge Comapny were purchased by the Joint Commission for the Elimination of Toll Bridge, the predecessor of the present Delaware River Joint Toll Bridge Commission. These holdings included land on both sides of the river, the old burned piers and abutments, the canal span in Centre Bridge (which had not burned), and the old stone tollhouse, which was also undamaged. The total purchase price was $10,000.

A new modern highway bridge was constructed on the old piers, which were encased in concrete. The new bridge, which is in service today, was built of steel and has a reinforced concrete roadway twenty feet wide, curb to curb. The bridge originally carried a timber walkway, which was later replaced with concrete in the year 1950.

The new bridge was completed and opened to traffic in 1927. In 1949 it was found necessary to rebuild the tops of all piers, due to disintegration of the concrete.

During 1952 the old stone tollhouse, originally constructed in 1816 or 1817, was demolished and removed by the Commission. Prior to its removal, a modern facility in the form of a new officers' shelter was constructed on the south side of the New Jersey approach, near the end of the bridge.

The present bridge is modern in every respect, and has a posted load of fifteen tons gross weight. The bridge is fairly well traveled.

THE LUMBERVILLE, PENNSYLVANIA-RAVEN ROCK, NEW JERSEY BRIDGE

The original bridge crossed the Delaware River in the same location as the present pedestrian bridge, and connected Lumberville, Solebury Township, in Bucks County, Pennsylvania with Raven Rock, Delaware Township, in Hunterdon County, New Jersey.

The first bridge to span the river at this location was built by "The Lumberville Delaware Bridge Company." This company was incorporated by an act of the Legislature of Pennsylvania on April 7, 1835, and by a concurring act by the New Jersey Legislature, passed on February 12, 1836.

According to the best information obtainable, work on the original bridge was begun during the year 1853 and completed about the year 1856—the cost being about $22,000.00. It is of interest to note here that the old records of the Lumberville Delaware River Bridge Company carried an item stating that there was included in the original cost of the bridge an item of expense for several barrels of rum furnished for the use of the workmen who built the bridge. It seems that more than money was necessary to complete the building of the bridge. The original bridge was a covered timber structure consisting of four spans across the Delaware River and one span over the Delaware Division Canal on the Pennsylvania side. The total length of the structure was 704.75 feet.

The bridge remained in continuous service since the date of its construction, with the exception of the first span over the river, which was washed away by the flood of October 10, 1903. This span was replaced in 1904 by a through steel truss bridge at a cost of about $4,700.00. The substructure of the original bridge is still standing today and now supports the present pedestrian crossing. All piers and abutments are constructed of rubble stone masonry shells with a loose stone-filled core.

A well-built stone residential building is located at the Pennsylvania end of the bridge. This building served for many years as the residence of the old toll collectors and later for the bridge police of the Commission.

The trusses of the wooden portion of the bridge were spaced 20.5 feet center to center—leaving a clear roadway between. The trusses were of latticed "Towne" type without supporting arches.

The bridge and its approaches, together with the residential building at the Pennsylvania end, were purchased by the States on July 21, 1932, for the sum of $25,000.00, and freed of tolls.

The upstream nose of Pier No. 2, the first river pier, crumbled and had to be rebuilt in 1943. During the repair work on this pier it was found that the entire superstructure, except the steel span, was in bad condition. A complete physical examination indicated that the bridge was unsafe for vehicular travel, and the structure was condemned and closed to travel in February of 1944. In 1947, the entire superstructure was demolished and removed, as a part of the contract for the construction of the new bridge crossing.

The new crossing is a multiple span suspension structure having stiffened cables carrying a prestressed, precast concrete walkway floor. It was constructed at a total cost of $75,000.00 which included the cost of removal of the old structure and also the cost of remodeling of both approaches.

The Point Pleasant Delaware Bridge Company was incorporated by an act of the Pennsylvania Legislature on February 9, 1853, and by a concurrent act on the part of the New Jersey Legislature on March 10 of the same year. According to these acts, the authorized capital stock was $20,000, divided into four hundred shares of $50.00 each. The title under which the company was authorized to operate was "The Point Pleasant Delaware Bridge Company." Under these acts, the company was prohibited from conducting a banking business.

The original bridge was constructed about 1854 or 1855 at a cost of about $20,000. It consisted of a wooden superstructure supported on stone masonry piers and abutments. A tollhouse was erected at the Pennsylvania end of the bridge. The entire superstructure of the bridge, together with the tollhouse, was completely destroyed by fire in April of 1892.

A new bridge was built by the company soon after the old one was destroyed. It was built of steel at a cost of $21,600. The flood of October 10, 1903, the highest of record, carried away four spans, leaving only the first span at the Pennsylvania end standing. The four spans were rebuilt in 1904 at a cost of about $16,500. The total damage by fire and flood had amounted to $38,100.

The building at the Pennsylvania end of the bridge, now used as a residence for a bridge officer, was probably built after the fire of 1892. Part of the building is presently being used as an officers' shelter.

The bridge and approaches, together with the old tollhouse, were purchased by the Joint Commission for the Elimination of Toll Bridges, the predecessor of the present Delaware River Joint Toll Bridge Commission, on January 6, 1916, for $30,000, and freed of tolls.

Soon after purchase of the structure it was completely renovated and put into good condition by the Commission. Piers and abutments were repaired and a new floor installed on the bridge. The bridge has never had a footwalk for the use of pedestrians. The present structure consists of five steel through spans and has a roadway width of only fifteen feet clear between wheelguards. It connects Point Pleasant on the Pennsylvania side with Byram on the New Jersey side. In the past, when Byram was a freight stop on the Belvidere and Delaware Railroad, the Point Pleasant Bridge carried a lot of traffic. Since the abandonment of freight service it has been reduced to a purely local traffic bridge.

In 1934 the Commission again refloored the bridge. This floor continued in service until it was again replaced during 1953. The Point Pleasant Bridge carries very little traffic at the present time. However, the New Jersey Highway Department is at the present time constructing a highway which will eventually connect Raven Rock with Kingwood. This road, together with the existing concrete highway between Kingwood and Frenchtown, will provide excellent travelling conditions along the New Jersey side of the river. When this new highway is completed, it is possible that the travel over the Point Pleasant Bridge will increase considerably.

THE UHLERTON, PENNSYLVANIA-FRENCHTOWN, NEW JERSEY BRIDGE

The bridge extends across the Delaware River and connects the Village of Uhlertown, Tinicum Township, Bucks County, Pennsylvania with the Borough of Frenchtown in Hunterdon County, New Jersey. The original bridge located at this site was constructed by the "Alexandria Delaware Bridge Company," which was incorporated by an act of the New Jersey Legislature on March 5, 1841. This act was concurred in at the same time by the Legislature of Pennsylvania.

The authorized capital stock, according to the act, was $30,000, with the right to increase the same to $40,000, if required; the par value of each share to be $50. Banking operations were prohibited.

Work on the original bridge was begun during the year 1842 and completed in 1843. The company records contained no figures indicating the cost, but "Snell's History" gives it as about $20,000.

The masonry substructure of the original bridge, consisting of 5 piers and 2 abutments, are still standing and now support the present bridge. The original superstructure consisted of 6 covered spans, having latticed trusses, known as the 'Towne Type." The flood of October 10, 1903, carried away the 2 spans nearest to the New Jersey shore. These two spans were replaced with steel through truss spans built in 1905, at a cost of about $10,000.

All of the holdings of Alexandria Delaware Bridge Company, including land, the bridge itself, and a residential building, located near the New Jersey end of the bridge, were purchased by the two States and freed of tolls on June 28, 1929, at a total cost of $45.000.

During 1931 the entire bridge was remodelled to fit it for carrying what was then modern traffic. The piers were recapped and repointed. The entire old superstructure, both wood and steel, was completely removed and replaced with a new six-span through steel structure, having a wooden floor and a sidewalk on one side. Both approaches were completely rebuilt and the residential structure was completely overhauled. The total cost of these repairs amounted to $96,523.65.

In 1949 the entire roadway of the bridge was removed and replaced with a more modern type open grating steel floor, complete with new steel wheel-guards. At the same time a permanent type reinforced concrete sidewalk was laid, replacing the old worn-out wooden one. The total cost of these renewals amounted to $93,410.00.

The present structure is posted for a safe load of fifteen-ton trucks, with a restriction on the axle load of twelve tons gross. Overhead clearance on the structure is 14'-8" maximum. Speed is restricted to twenty miles per hour.

The structure is well lighted by means of six 6,6000 lumen lamps, in modern type luminaires.

THE UPPER BLACK EDDY, PENNSYLVANIA-MILFORD, NEW JERSEY BRIDGE

The bridge at this location extends across the Delaware River connecting Upper Black Eddy, Bridgeton Township, Bucks County, Pennsylvania with Milford Borough, in Hunterdon County, New Jersey. The site of the bridge is at a point formerly occupied by a ferry successively known as 'Lowrytown Ferry"; "Burnt Mills Ferry"; and "Milford Ferry."

The first structure erected at this site was built by the "Milford Delaware Bridge Company"—a company incorporated by an act of the New Jersey Legislature on March 8, 1836. This act was concurred in by the Legislature of Pennsylvania on June 24, 1839.

The authorized capital stock, according to the act, was 400 shares of $50 each, or a total amount of $20,000. The act prohibited the company from conducting banking operations.

The original bridge was constructed during the year 1941, and opened for tolls during 1942. The cost of the original bridge, including 2 piers and 2 abutments, amounted to $27,000. Records show that during the five years following the construction of the bridge, the company spent $7,200 on repairs, a sizeable sum in those days.

The flood of October 10, 1903, carried away one of the three spans—the one on the New Jersey end of the structure. This span was replaced by another of the same type at a cost of $11,000. The new span was built of timbers washed down from the Riegelsville Bridge by the same flood. The timber was purchased at a very low rate, making the cost of the new span less than would have been the case had it been necessary to procure entirely new timber.

The original bridge was constructed of wooden through truss spans, strenghtened by timber arches sprung from the piers and abutments.

The spans length were 231 feet; 213 feet; and 237 feet—making a total length of 681 feet for the whole bridge. Trusses were spaced 29 feet—center to center—and were protected from the weather by a timber housing. The wooden trusses apparently showed some signs of weakening, for the records indicate that the company added iron rods and bolts costing about $950 during the year 1878.

The bridge and other holdings were purchased by the States on June 28, 1929, for $45,000, and freed of tolls. In 1933, the bridge, being unfit for modern traffic, was completely rebuilt. The piers and the abutments were recapped, the entire superstructure was replaced with a modern through truss steel structure, having a concrete filled steel grid roadway floor and a reinforced concrete sidewalk on one side. In addition to this, both approaches were rebuilt, and the residential building at the New Jersey end of the bridge was remodelled—inside and out. The total cost of new superstructure, including repairs to the piers, etc., amounted to $89,970.

In 1935 it was found necessary to underpin the foundation of Pier No. 2 and the New Jersey Abutment to prevent settlement. A concrete collar was poured completely around the base of the pier, and its timber crib, on which the pier was founded. The cost of the work amounted to $35,000.

The present structure is capable of carrying 20-ton trucks with a maximum weight of 15 tons on an axle. It is a modern, well-lighted structure capable of carrying present-day heavy traffic. The roadway width is 20 feet curb to curb. It has a maximum vertical clearance of 16 feet 10 inches. Speed is restricted to 20 miles per hour.

RIEGELSVILLE, PENNSYLVANIA-REIGELSVILLE, NEW JERSEY BRIDGE

The bridge crossing the Delaware River at this location stands at the same site as the original structure, and connects Reigelsville, Durham Township, Bucks County, Pennsylvania with Reigelsville, in Pohatcong Township, Warren County, New Jersey.

The first structure to be erected at this site was built by the "Rigelsville Delaware Bridge Company," a company incorporated by acts of the Pennsylvania and New Jersey Legislatures, both dated November 6, 1835.

The capital stock authorized by the acts was $20,000, divided into 400 shares of $50 each. As in the case of other bridge companies, banking operations were prohibited.

The original bridge was constructed about the year 1835, and was of the covered wooden type. This bridge remained in service until the entire superstructure was swept away by the flood of October 10, 1903. After the flood the bridge was replaced with a 3-span multiple suspension-type superstructure, about the year 1904, at a cost of $30,767; thus amount included raising the piers and repairing damage to the masonry. This bridge still stands today.

The bridge was purchased by the States on January 4, 1923, for $50,000 and freed of tolls. Included in the purchase was the land at both ends of the bridge and a residential building located on the New Jersey Approach.

Soon after the purchase of the bridge it was found necessary to relay the wood roadway and sidewalk floors. This was in 1925. Floorbeams were stiffened in 1930. The stiffening trusses required reinforcing, and this work was done in 1932. The flood of 1936 almost completely demolished Pier No. 1, the pier nearest the Pennsylvania shore. Emergency repairs were made, including the complete rebuilding of this pier in reinforced concrete.

The roadway floor was again renewed in 1949. The residential building on the New Jersey Approach was completely demolished and removed in 1951, being no longer necessary. The bridge police are using the officers' shelter constructed in 1941.

The bridge is restricted to the passage of ten-ton trucks, only one truck on a span at any one time. The structure is obsolete in every way and is very limited in regards to modern-day traffic requirements.

EASTON, PENNSYLVANIA-PHILLIPSBURG, NEW JERSEY (NORTHAMPTON STREET) BRIDGE

This bridge connects the City of Easton, Northampton County, Pennsylvania with the Town of Phillipsburg, Warren County, New Jersey, and is a continuation of Northampton Street in Easton, Pennsylvania.

The present bridge, operated as a free bridge, lies at the same site of the original bridge, built in 1805. The original structure was built by a company which was incorporated by an act of the Legislature of Pennsylvania, dated March 13, 1795, and by a concurrent act on the part of the New Jersey Legislature under date of March 18, 1795.

The charter for this bridge company is older than that of any of the other companies which built bridges over the Delaware River between the States of Pennsylvania and New Jersey. The title of the company, as set forth in the acts, was "The President, Managers and Company for erecting a bridge over the Delaware River, at the Borough of Easton." The capital stock of the company appears to have been about $50,000, which was not sufficient to complete the construction of the bridge. Under date of April 4, 1798, the Legislature of Pennsylvania passed an act authorizing the "President and Managers" to raise by lottery the sum of $12,500 for the purpose of completing the bridge. This act expressly stated that the amount to be raised by lottery should not be included as part of the capital stock upon which dividends or profits could be declared. The Legislature of New Jersey passed a similar act under date of November 14, 1799.

By act of the Pennsylvania Legislature bearing date of March 12, 1802, and concurred in by the New Jersey Legislature, the time for completing the bridge was extended "for seven years from and after the 13th day of March next." This extension of time was given on account of difficulties and delays encountered in carrying out the work.

The entire cost of constructing the bridge appears to have been about $65,000. The original bridge was a covered wooden structure of three spans, designed and constructed by Timothy Palmer of Newburyport, Massachusetts. According to some accounts, the bridge was finished in 1805, although statements made by James Madison Porter in his communication to the Legislature of Pennsylvania, the bridge was not opened to the public in that year, but at a later date, as he states the first tolls were received on October 14, 1806.

The bridge consisted of three lines of trusses, with the lower chords arched. The two outer lines of trusses were "through," with a center truss in each span of the "deck type." The outer trusses were spaced 27 ft. center to center, leaving a clear roadway between. The entire bridge was constructed of wood and was protected from the weather by a timber housing.

Th bridge remained in continuous service until the year 1895, when it was removed and replaced by the present steel cantilever structure. The removal of the original bridge was not due to decay, but was brought about by its inadequacy for carrying the class of traffic demanded, and for the further reason that it had become more or less of a nuisance.

The present bridge was purchased by the States on August 3, 1921, for $300,000, and freed of tolls. Major repairs were made to the entire structure in 1925, as the old steel bridge had gotten into a state of disrepair. Roadway stringers and floorbeams were repaired and strengthened, a new concrete roadway floor and sidewalks were installed, and the eye bar anchor rods were replaced with the new alloy steel bars. The roadway floor was repaved both in 1925 and 1939. The bridge formerly carried trolley cars, which were later discontinued, and the trolley rails finally removed in 1951 when the roadway was repaved with sheet asphalt.

The structure has a 32 ft. wide roadway between curbs. It is restricted to trucks weighing no more than seven tons gross. The maximum speed permitted over the bridge is 25 miles per hour. This bridge has always carried more traffic annually than any other bridge over the river north of Trenton, New Jersey.

RIVERTON, PENNSYLVANIA-BELVIDERE, NEW JERSEY BRIDGE

The bridge located at this site extends across the Delaware River from Riverton, in Mount Bethel Township, Northampton County, Pennsylvania to the Borough of Belvidere, Warren County, New Jersey.

"The Belvidere Delaware Bridge Company" was incorporated by an act of the New Jersey Legislature on March 15, 1832, and by a concurrent act on the part of the Pennsylvania Legislature on February 11, 1833. By the provisions of the original act, the authorized capital stock was placed at $20,000 and divided into shares of $50 each. Banking operations were prohibited.

According to "Snell's History of Sussex and Warren Counties," published in 1881, the first bridge at this site was a covered, wooden structure of the arch pattern. This history also states that work was begun in 1934 and finished early in the spring of 1836, and that about four months after the completion of the bridge two-thirds of it was carried away by high water. The same authority also states that the company commenced rebuilding in 1838, and that by the fall of 1839 the bridge was again opened to traffic. The statement is also made that up to the year 1881, owing to damage by floods, expenses, etc., the company had never paid a dividend.

The bridge company's financial condition seems to have been involved, judging from the provisions of an act passed by the New Jersey Legislature, on March 8, 1871, this act being supplementary to the acts of 1832 and 1834. The act referred to provides that, in view of a suit for the foreclosure of a mortgage upon the bridge, the service of legal process upon the gatekeeper or receiver of tolls, should be deemed sufficient process upon the company, and that the purchasers were to be vested with the power to organize a new company and issue stock.

During the flood of October 10, 1903, the superstructure of the bridge was again carried away, and the present steel structure was erected about the year 1904 at a cost of about $25,000.

The bridge and its approaches were purchased by the two States on June 14, 1929, for the sum of $60,000 and freed of tolls. The bridge, as purchased, consisted of four through truss spans carrying a wooden floor and no sidewalks. Three spans were each 153 feet long, and one span was 169 feet in length. The total length of the structure was 629 feet. The substructure consisted of three rubble masonry piers and two abutments. When purchased, the bridge was badly in need of repairs. In 1929 new floor stringers were installed, certain truss members which had weakened were strengthened, a new wooden roadway floor was laid, and the entire structure was sandblasted and properly painted.

In the same year, the bases of two of the piers were encased with reinforced concrete. The remaining pier was encased later in 1931, and in this same year of 1931 a footwalk was added to one side of the bridge.

The wooden roadway floor having become inadequate, it was replaced in 1947 with a modern open grating steel floor. At the same time the wooden floor of the sidewalk was replaced with concrete. The structure is well lighted by means of 4,000-lumens lamps—two per span.

In 1930 a residential building was built on the north side of the New Jersey Approach as quarters for the bridge police. The Pennsylvania Approach was remodelled and repaved in 1931, as was also the New Jersey Approach.

The bridge has a vertical overhead clearance of 16 feet, 2 inches, and is posted for a safe load of 8 tons gross weight. Axle loadings are limited to 6 tons.

UPPER MT. BETHEL, PENNSYLVANIA-DELAWARE, NEW JERSEY BRIDGE

This bridge extends from a point near the Village of Delaware, Knowlton Township, Warren County, New Jersey across the Delaware River to Upper Mt. Bethel, Northampton County, Pennsylvania.

The bridge was originally a railroad bridge, constructed by the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad Company, and later abandoned by that company after constructing their present bridge located at a point further up the river. The bridge stood idle and partly dismantled for a number of years, and the railroad company had reached the point of tearing it down, when it was sold to the promoters of a turnpike company. The exact amount involved in the transaction is not definitely known, but is said to have been $5,000, a figure approximately representing its salvage value.

The company which purchased the bridge was originally incorporated as the "Knowlton Turnpike and Bridge Company," under the provisions of the "Turnpike Act" of the New Jersey Laws of 1880, page 181 of the codified laws. By the provisions of this act the company was authorized to build, construct and own turnpikes and bridges.

After the incorporation of this company some question arose as to whether the provisions of the act under which the company was incorporated would permit them to occupy the territory in the Delaware River, subject to State control. To remove any uncertainty in this respect, a special act was introduced in the New Jersey Legislature and passed by that body on March 30, 1915.

By the terms of this act the Knowlton Turnpike and Bridge Company was authorized to construct, maintain and operate a bridge across the Delaware River near the Village of Delaware, Knowlton Township, Warren County, New Jersey, by using the piers and location of the raidroad bridge formerly used by the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad Company crossing that river.

The portion of the bridge in Pennsylvania was covered by an act incorporating a company under the title of the "Knowlton Bridge Company of Northampton County, Pennsylvania," this act being passed by the Legislature of that State on April 30, 1915.

The act provided for a capital stock of $5,000, divided into shares of $100 each, with authority to increase the total amount to $30,000, if necessary. This charter from the State of Pennsylvania, together with all of the rights and property acquired by its authority, was subsequently transferred to the Knowlton Turnpike and Bridge Company of New Jersey. The old railroad bridge was reconditioned to adapt it to highway purposes. Missing stringers were replaced and concrete roadways were installed. The structure consists of five spans, each span having three trusses and two roadways. Roadways are narrow, being only 11' between curbs. The piers are built of stone masonry founded on timber cribbing. Abutments are also of stone construction.

The bridge and its approaches were purchased by the States on February 18, 1932, for the sum of $275,000, and freed of tolls. Changing conditions of traffic have since made this structure inadequate to meet the demands placed upon it. The bridge was closed to all traffic on April 9, 1954. A new highway bridge has recently been constructed north of this structure, connecting Portland, Pennsylvania with Columbia, New Jersey.

THE PORTLAND, PENNSYLVANIA-COLUMBIA, NEW JERSEY BRIDGE

The first bridge to cross the Delaware River at the site of the present bridge, extending from the Borough of Portland, Northampton County, Pennsylvania, to the Village of Columbia, Knowlton Township, Warren County, New Jersey, was built by the "Columbia Delaware Bridge Company."

This company was incorporated by an act of the New Jersey Legislature, dated March 7, 1839, and later by a concurrent act on the part of the Pennsylvania Legislature. The capital stock provided by the act was $20,000; par value of each share was $50. Banking operations were prohibited.

On February 24, 1869, the New Jersey Legislature passed an act providing for an increase of the capital stock to $40,000. Construction was begun about the year 1839, but failed for lack of funds after the piers and abutments had nearly been completed. The whole project then remained at a standstill until revived again about the year 1868, when the present structure was begun, and completed the following year. The cost of the present bridge was about $46,600.

During the flood of October 10, 1903, the bridge suffered only slight damages. The bridge consists of four spans, built of timber and reinforced by wooden arches sprung from the piers and abutments. The trusses are spaced 19'-3" center to center, with a clear roadway between them. There are no sidewalks. The entire structure is protected from the weather by a wooden shed surmounted by a slate roof.

The bridge and its approaches were purchased by the States on May 2, 1927, for the sum of $50,250, and freed of tolls. Soon after its purchase, in 1929, the structure was completely overhauled. All weakened truss parts were removed and replaced. Steel connecting plates and rods were installed, and the floor was renewed, as was the exterior timber covering.

On December 1, 1953, all vehicular traffic formerly using this structure was rerouted over the new Portland-Columbia Toll Bridge, constructed just south of the old bridge. The structure is still open for pedestrian travel.

THE MILFORD, PENNSYLVANIA-MONTAGUE, NEW JERSEY BRIDGE

The bridge crossing the Delaware River at this location extends from a point near the outskirts of Milford Borough, in Pike County, Pennsylvania to Montague Township, in Sussex County, New Jersey. The original bridge crossed the river at the same location as the present bridge. It was constructed by a company having the title of "The President, Managers and Company for erecting a bridge over the Delaware River near the Town of Milford."

The original act authorizing the formation of this company was passed by the Pennsylvania Legislature on March 12, 1804. This act provided that it should be null and void unless a similar act was passed by the Legislature of New Jersey. Furthermore, the act provided that work should be started within four years after its passage, and, if not completed within ten years from that date, the act should become null and void. None of these conditions were complied with and this act therefore became void.

On January 27, 1814, the State of New Jersey passed an act incorporating a company bearing the same title as above and this act was later ratified by the Legislature of Pennsylvania.

The original bridge was of covered wood construction, built about the year 1826, at a cost of $20,300, this amount being exclusive of the ferry rights and the cost of the roads at the approaches. The original bridge was damaged and the New Jersey span collapsed and fell in 1841. Repairs were made at a cost of $2,830.30, according to the records. In 1846 the entire bridge fell and was again rebuilt in 1856 at a cost of $8,255.22. The bridge again fell in 1863 and was rebuilt in 1869 at a cost of $12,300.

In 1888 the bridge was carried away by the flood, and the piers damaged. The present bridge was built the following year, 1889, at a cost of $25,280. Of this amount, $6,180 represented notes placed in the bank by the Managers of the Company, which required thirteen years to pay off, the first dividend being declared in 1901.

The substructure of the bridge consists of two piers and two abutments, all built of rubble stone masonry. The pier footings rest on timber cribs founded on the river bottom, and protected from scour by stone rip rap.

The superstructure consits of three through steel spans of Phoenix Column Construction, now obsolete. The roadway floor is of wood, supported on wooden beams. The roadway width is very narrow, being only 13'-11" between curbs.

The bridge and its approaches were purchased by the States on April 25, 1922, for the sum of $31,500, and freed of tolls. Immediately after its purchase, the foundations of Pier No. 1 on the Pennsylvania side of the river were underpinned and encased with concrete. The rip rap of Pier No. 2 had to be grouted to stabilize it in 1927, in 1937, and again in 1946.

On December 30, 1953, the new toll bridge, located just south of the old bridge, was opened to traffic, and the old Milford-Montague free bridge was closed to traffic. It is the intention of the Commission to demolish and remove the old structure.

TRAINING SCHOOL

The Commission, fully realizing the need for adequate training of its personnel, in the interest of more efficient operation, formally opened its training school located on the grounds of the Milford-Montague Bridge at Milford, Pennsylvania, in October, 1954, and during the balance of the year completed the training of sixty-two toll and traffic officers. This was accomplished by operating four sessions of the Training School. Each session was two weeks' duration. Classes were held from 8 A. M. to 5 P. M. and evenings from 7 P. M. to 9 P. M. five days a week for two weeks. The men slept in barracks while attending these sessions. They were confined to the premises and recreation was provided for a short period each day.

This method of training will be continued during the year of 1955. After the initial training course has been completed, future plans call for a one-week advanced training course designed to acquaint all personnel with new developments in toll operation.

The instructors were Commission officers and in addition instructors were obtained from the Pennsylvania State Police, the New Jersey State Police, and the Federal Bureau of Investigation. Instruction in First Aid was under the direction of a qualified Red Cross Instructor.

Toll and Traffic Officers are in daily contact with the traveling public crossing our facilities, as many different problems present themselves daily. The course of instruction was designed to review the basic fundamentals of their work and to give them additional training particularly in public relations, human behavior, First Aid, history and geography and points of interests in the States of Pennsylvania and New Jersey, accident investigation, traffic control and techniques, reports and report writing, a review of rules and regulations, pension system and other personnel problems. We again reviewed toll operations and supervision and practice and procedures. Some time was given to the students on the subject of how to study and learn and to take notes in the classroom.

At the completion of this training, which totaled 100 hours, each student was required to pass a written examination. The several Bridge Superintendents have reported that the personnel under their supervision who attended the training school have greatly benefited by the instruction and are now considerably more proficient in their work.

OTHER SERVICES

While the primary duties of the toll and traffic officers are to collect tolls and direct and regulate traffic, these men must be able to serve the needs of the traveling public when requested; to give information and directives concerning the main traveled routes; and to answer the many questions of motorists concerning historical facts and sites. The bridge police have a primary function of protecting Commission property and maintaining the bridges in a safe condition to serve the pedestrian and vehicular traffic using our facilities. They, too, must be able to serve the public needs in respect to requests made upon them. Many thousands of tourists, as well as citizens of the two States, visit our bridges and adjacent historical sites, particularly in the Washington Crossing and Delaware Water Gap areas.

Many vehicles have been stopped at the bridges, at the request of the police of both New Jersey and Pennsylvania, in order to return items left at hotels, tourist homes and courts.

Through the alertness of Commission employees, persons attempting suicide have been thwarted, and missing bodies have been detected in the river. Wherever possible, the Commission employees give aid.

The bridge police are ever on the alert for stolen cars crossing the bridges, and have been responsible for recoveries.

Missing persons and runaway juveniles have, on occasion, been picked up and turned over to local authorities.

Vehicles violating the regulations of the Department of Weights and Measures of the State of New Jersey are stopped by the Commission's bridge police when requested by that Department.

Records are kept by the bridge police of all carriers of gasoline using the bridges over the river, and are forwarded to the Motor Fuels Division, Department of the Treasury of the State of New Jersey.

Space on the Calhoun Street Bridge has been provided for the installation of a sampling device for determining the amount of silt in the water of the Delaware River. This was done at the request of the United States Geological Department. Daily samples of river water are taken by the Government at this point.

Several times during the year, at the request of the Secretary of Agriculture, Bureau of Animal Industry, Pennsylvania State Department of Agriculture, Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, all vehicles used in the transportation of any swine, entering the State of Pennsylvania over our bridges, were stopped to determine whether they held proper certificate showing that the swine were properly cleaned and disinfected under the supervision of a veterinarian prior to the time of loading. The purpose of this inspection was to prevent swine having Vesicular Exanthema or other communicable disease from entering the State.

TRAFFIC RECORDS

Assistance is furnished by the Commission in the form of traffic records forwarded weekly to the Planning Division of the State Highway Department of New Jersey and other interested agencies.

Records of traffic crossing the Delaware River bridges are furnished to the Department of Highways of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

The following compiled activities of the Bridge Officers assigned to the free bridges of the Commission indicate the many and varied duties the officers perform, in addition to patrolling the facilities and their approaches and directing traffic whenever necessary at intersections of the bridge approaches.

RIVER GAUGE READINGS

River gauge readings are given to the Weather Bureau, industries and property owners during flood periods.

Each bridge under the jurisdiction of the Commission is equipped with a gauge for the purpose of reading the stage of the water in the Delaware River. Readings are taken at 8 A. M. and 4 P. M. each day by the Bridge Officer, except in time of flood stage, when the readings are taken at hourly intervals until the flood subsides. When the river rises five feet above normal, readings are taken hourly. Records of all readings are kept on file at the main office of the Commission at Morrisville, Pennsylvania, and are in the custody of the Chief Engineer. Copies are also furnished to the office of the District Engineer of the United States Geological Survey at Trenton, New Jersey.

This information has been of great value to contractors doing work along the river, as they are able to protect and regulate their procedure of work by contacting the Chief Engineer's Office as to the time and elevation of high water that is expected at various points along the river. This information can be obtained from the gauge readings and various charts on hand and placed at their disposal.

This also applies to manufacturers merchants and residents along the river whose land and buildings are below the flood stages. From information supplied by calling the Chief Engineer of the Commission, they know whether to move equipment and supplies to higher ground or other floors and hence are able to protect their property.

At the same time, close contact is immediately established with Army Engineers at Philadelphia, newspapers, and other interested agencies.

CIVIL DEFENSE

During the past year, both New Jersey and Pennsylvania had several Air Raid test warnings, and in each instance, Bridge Officers co-operated by clearing the bridges of all traffic and preventing the movement of traffic during the duration of the test.

In order to reduce the notification time in relaying the message to all bridges, the Bridge Commission has co-operated with Civil Defense Officials in New Jersey, whereby a quick and simplified communication system has been placed in operation. This was necessary as several of our bridges have the telephones located on the Pennsylvania side of the river and are listed in that State. The reverse is true when Pennsylvania has Air Raid tests. In order to make this communication system uniform for both States, Civil Defense Officials in New Jersey are working in conjunction with Pennsylvania Civil Defense Officials, whereby the same system will be used by both States to alert all Commission Bridges.

GROUND OBSERVER CORPS

The United States Army Air Force and Civil Defense Forces of both New Jersey and Pennsylvania have established a series of ground observation posts to report the passage of aircraft.

In setting up this network, one of the problems of both of these organizations was finding suitable locations in rural areas that provided twenty-four hour per day coverage. The Bridge Commission cooperated in this vital part of our national defense by establishing such posts at the following bridges: Centre Bridge, Pennsylvania-Stockton, New Jersey; Point Pleasant, Pennsylvania-Byram, New Jersey, and Riverton, Pennsylvania-Belvidere, New Jersey.

ROAD BLOCK PLAN

All police departments, including the Pennsylvania State Police and the Federal Bureau of Investigation, located in the Lehigh Valley area of Pennsylvania, have established a road block plan which will be placed into operation in the event any major crime is committed in this area.

Should this be placed in operation, a total of fifty-five road blocks would be established on highways considered as possible escape routes that might be used by the criminals. Many of these routes extend into New Jersey and are covered by the New Jersey State Police.

In this endeavor, the Bridge Commission has cooperated by setting up a communication system whereby all bridges located in this area would be immediately advised should the road block plan be placed in operation.

YARDLEY FIRE ALARM SYSTEM

The Borough of Yardley, Pennsylvania is a rural community located approximately four miles north of Morrisville, Pennsylvania, and for fire protection depends on a volunteer fire company. There are no street fire alarm boxes and fire alarms are relayed via telephone. This presented the problem to the borough of finding some method whereby fire calls could be received twenty-four hours per day. After several conferences between Yardley Borough and Bridge Commission Officials, a fire alarm system has been installed in the Yardley Bridge Shelter.

All in-coming fire calls are received by special telephone installed in the bridge shelter. Upon receipt of a fire call, the Bridge Officer obtains the following information:

Name of person calling
Location of fire
Telephone number of person calling.

Immediately following receipt of the fire call, the Bridge Officer presses the alarm button located in the shelter, which sounds the fire alarm. The first fireman to respond at the firehouse calls the bridge on a direct line and is given information on the fire.

The Borough of Yardley has a Mutual Aid plan with other nearby municipalities and this service extended by the Bridge Commission has improved the fire protection and has created excellent public relations.

RIEGELSVILLE FIRE ALARM SYSTEM

The Riegelsville Bridge Shelter, Riegelsville, New Jersey, has a fire alarm siren on the outside of the building, similar to the arrangement at our Yardley, Pennsylvania Bridge Shelter. The procedure for the use of the fire alarm is as follows:

Persons reporting a fire call the Bridge Officer who, in turn, sounds the siren and then calls the firehouse at Riegelsville, Pennsylvania to notify them of the location of the fire which has been reported to him. In the event the call is not answered, the officer waits until a representative of the fire company arrives at the firehouse and calls the Bridge Officer for information as to the location of the fire.

MAINTENANCE AND OPERATION OF FREE BRIDGE FACILITIES

All maintenance work in the free bridge facilities is done by the Commission's own forces, operating under the control and supervision of the Engineering Department. At times it becomes necessary, due to the limited facilities of its own forces, to employ outside contractors to carry out some parts of the program. The Commission maintains its own staff of Engineers and Architects, who do all necessary planning, preparation of specifications, and the inspection of all construction—both for new work and for the maintenance of existing bridges, approaches and buildings.

The Commission maintains storage yards and repair shops at New Hope, Pennsylvania; in Phillipsburg, New Jersey, and at Belvidere, New Jersey. All crews are equipped with both light and heavy trucks as well as the latest in hand and power-operated tools.

Ordinary routine maintenance consists of keeping all bridges, bridge approaches, and grounds in a clean, presentable condition. Lawns are fertilized and reseeded, and the grass mowed at regular intervals. Shrubbery is kept worked and trimmed and replaced when necessary in the proper season. Top soil is added as required.

Approaches are cleaned weekly of debris, inlets are cleaned at regular intervals. Damaged paving is repaired. Macadam paving is seal coated with tar and stone chips to preserve its life. Usually a single coat is applied, but when necessary, a double application is used.

Traffic striping, on all approaches, is done mechanically with a self-propelled machine which lays a white paint line and covers it with a layer of glass beads to increase visibility at night.

Steel bridge superstructures are touched up and painted to prevent rusting. On the average each bridge is given a full finish coat of paint every six years. During the calendar year, two bridges were repainted—one was the New Hope-Lambertville Bridge, and the other, the Washington Crossing Bridge. This work was done by contract. With three exceptions, all of the bridges have modern, permanent type roadway floors. Some have reinforced concrete floors, covered with either macadam or sheet asphalt. Three have floors of the old wooden planking variety. The others have modern, steel open grating floors. Very little or no maintenance is required on this type of roadway. In addition, they require no snow removal and no repainting.

All bridge structures, including tops of piers and abutments, are blown clear of dirt and other foreign matter by means of compressed air at least twice a year. Expansion joints and roller nests are greased regularly.

Substructure maintenance usually consists of replacing loose or missing stones, clearing away debris which collects around the pier bases, and repointing joints in the masonry with cement mortar. At times it is necessary to replace stone rip-rap which has been washed away, and to reshape and regrout existing rip-rap to prevent scouring of the pier foundations.

Almost all of the bridges operated by the Commission originally had residential structures located at one or both ends of the bridge. In the past it was found advisable to allow Bridge Officers to live in these houses. Over the years, this policy developed many problems, and it was decided to remove them as and when their condition became such that it was not economical to retain them. Many of them have been demolished and removed. Two such houses were demolished during the calendar year of 1954, the one on the New Jersey Approach of the Uhlertown -Frenchtown Bridge, and the other on the New Jersey Approach of the Upper Black Eddy-Milford Bridge. This demolition was done by the Commission's own forces.

Also, during the calendar year of 1954, one other such residential structure was disposed of by sale—the proceeds being turned back into the New Jersey State Treasury. This house was located near the New Jersey end of the Riverton-Belvidere Bridge.

The Commission has from time to time constructed small officers' shelters for the convenience of the bridge police. All of the more heavily traveled bridges now have shelters at both ends of the bridge—the lesser traveled bridges have only a shelter at one end. During the calendar year of 1954 two such shelters were constructed and a third was started. The two completed shelters were located—one on the New Jersey Approach of the New Hope-Lambertville Bridge; the other on the New Jersey Approach of the Uhlertown-Frenchtown Bridge. Construction of a third shelter was begun on the New Jersey Approach of the Upper Black Eddy-Milford Bridge and will be completed early next year.

Maintenance of shelters consists of keeping all windows and doors in good operating condition. Locks are repaired or replaced where necessary. Each shelter is painted completely inside and out once a year. Broken windows are replaced. Gas fired home type heaters are used to provide heat and require little or no maintenance. Floors are cleaned and rewaxed at regular intervals.

The movement of vehicular traffic at each bridge is recorded automatically by means of traffic detector pads embedded in the floor of the bridges or in the paving of the approaches. Traffic count is read hourly. Being of a very delicate nature, traffic counting devices require frequent adjustments and repair. Traffic detector pads have to be replaced quite often.

During the calendar year of 1954 two permanent installations of traffic detector pads were made, one on the New Jersey Approach of the Centre Bridge-Stockton Bridge and the other on the Pennsylvania Approach of the Point Pleasant-Byram Bridge.

All bridges are equipped with water stage gauges, by means of which the stage of the river is taken twice daily, at 8 A. M. and at 4 P. M. During flood periods, readings are taken every hour until the flood subsides. The actual readings are taken by the bridge officers on duty.

All traffic and warning signs are built, painted, and lettered by the maintenance forces, and kept in good repair.

Twice yearly, all equipment is reconditioned and repainted. Mobile equipment is serviced monthly by the Commission's own forces.

During the winter seasons, all bridges and approaches, including pedestrian sidewalks, are kept clear of snow and ice. Sanding is used when considered necessary. The maintenance crews are on 24-hour call at such times and are responsible for keeping all roads clear.

FUTURE FACILITIES

Changing locations of industry, increasing and shifting of population, the developing and improving of the gasoline engine, the diesel motor and the future development of the atomic motor all add up to a fast-changing traffic pattern for today and for many years to come. These factors have added greatly to the car-miles driven by the owner of every registered vehicle in the nation. These factors will bear more and more on the location and design of future highways, bridges and tunnels.

President Eisenhower has proposed a ten-year highway program to meet, or at least to correct to a marked degree, intolerable traffic conditions which are evident in the daily conglomeration and congestion of traffic happenings in the metropolitan districts of every large city in the country. These conditions hold true on our highways, bridges, and tunnels on weekends, holidays and before and after special events such as sporting events and other large gatherings. The condition will continue to become worse unless a comprehensive construction program is developed and carried through.

We normally take traffic conditions as a matter of course. Not until such conditions affect the daily lives of the people do they realize that our present highway system is inadequate. All manner of solutions are discussed after the situation strikes home. Suggestions are made that separate highways should be constructed for commercial vehicles; these vehicles should be kept off the highways on weekends; cities and towns should be bypassed. None of these will solve the present traffic problems. Little or no thought is given by the average citizen to the growth of automobile production and increased traffic until the manufacturer makes newspaper headlines as to what is being produced week by week. In the year 1914, the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce reported that 1,711,339 cars and trucks were registered in the nation. Ten years later, 1924, registration of vehicles jumped to 17,595,373. The Public Roads Administration reported 24,317,020 cars, trucks and buses registered in 1934. Ten years later, 1944, 30,499,608 vehicles were reported as registered; and in 1954, it is estimated that 58,000,000 motor vehicles were registered in this country. It is predicted that in 1965 there will be 81,000,000 registered vehicles, passenger cars, trucks, and buses on the highways; and in 1974, the estimate is the phenomenal figure of 92,000,000 vehicles. It is obvious, therefore, that we must look forward to providing in the next two decades highways, bridges and tunnels for nearly twice the number of vehicles as there were on the highways in 1954.

Why are we faced with a highway system out of step in a nation living on wheels? World War II virtually put an end to not only the program of normal highway construction but limited the maintenance of highways already built. Many of these highways were obsolete before construction was completed. Lack of maintenance of highways accelerated the deterioration and destruction of our highway system. While highway construction lagged, vehicle-miles of travel increased two-fold. The Korean War did not add to the normal highway construction program nor to the solution of traffic problems confronting the States or the nation as a whole.

Since the construction of the original Pennsylvania Turnpike, there has been a steady development and construction of turnpikes in many sections of the country. Turnpikes are not altogether the answer to the general over-all traffic situation. Turnpikes are, more or less, dependent on feeder roads; State highways, interstate bridges and tunnels and service roads. Turnpikes have relieved, none the less, some of the traffic congestion in many areas. Their design and construction have produced conveniences and safety factors in keeping with modern-day travel.

In the future planning and design of highways to provide smooth-flowing traffic in and through our metropolitan areas, a study of the conveniences and safety factors offered by turnpikes, freeways and limited access highways would contribute, to some degree, to the solution of our traffic problems. Similar planning should not be overlooked at State boundary lines where river crossings are involved.

The Delaware River Joint Toll Bridge Commission is as concerned with providing adequate facilities as are other agencies of government. To understand this position, one must go back to the early history of transportation across the Delaware River. In 1912 the Delaware River was spanned by fifteen highway bridges, meeting the requirements of the day. In 1915 one was added by converting an obsolete railroad structure to a highway bridge. All of the fifteen bridges were originally wooden structures built by private interests as toll bridges by authority of the Legislatures of the State of New Jersey and the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania. A flood in the Delaware River in 1903 washed away five of the wooden bridges, spans of four other bridges were carried away and a span of another damaged. Those bridges which were lost were replaced with iron or steel structures. Those spans of the wooden bridges carried away were replaced with iron, steel or with timber. The one bridge damaged was repaired by adding additional members.

The State of New Jersey in 1912 and the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania in 1913 created a State Authority in the form of a "Joint Interstate Commission" to purchase the bridges on the Delaware and free them of toll. For reference purposes, the Commission was designated as the "Joint Commission for the Elimination of Toll Bridges over the Delaware River between Pennsylvania and New Jersey." We had not yet reached the alphabet age. This title, almost as long as some of the bridges, stayed with the Commission for 19 years. The Joint Commission, as constituted by legislative acts, proceeded to evaluate the rights, franchises and property of a number of the bridge companies. It soon learned that some of the physical properties it had acquired were in poor condition. The Commission was not provided with funds to maintain properly and repair what it had acquired; nor did it have any reserve funds except those specifically approved for definite purposes, namely the purchase of bridges.

What did the Joint Commission acquire? The present Point Pleasant-Byram Bridge, built in 1903, was purchased in 1916. The roadway of the bridge is only 14'-6" wide and the capacity of the structure is limited to 5 tons. What is known as the "Lower Trenton-Morrisville Bridge" was purchased in 1918. Ten years later, this became obsolete and had to be torn down and replaced. As rebuilt and as of today, it is one of four modern free bridges spanning the Delaware. In 1919, the present New Hope-Lambertville Bridge was purchased. The bridge was constructed in 1904. Because of ever-increasing volume and weight of commercial vehicles using the bridge, a section of one of the trusses failed in 1952. The present Northampton Street Bridge between Easton and Phillipsburg was purchased in 1921. Built in 1895, this bridge has a roadway width of 32 feet and a gross loading capacity of 7 tons.

The year 1922 was an active one for the Joint Commission. The Washington Crossing Bridge, purchased in April, was built in 1903. It had a roadway width of only 15 feet and a gross load capacity of 6 tons. So narrow is the roadway of this bridge, the Commission was forced to install hand-controlled traffic lights to regulate the movement of cars and light trucks across the bridge. The same month the Milford-Montague Bridge, now closed to all traffic, passed into the hands of the Commission. This structure with a roadway width of 13'-11" and a capacity of 5 tons was a problem since the day it was purchased.

The Yardley-Wilburtha Bridge, built in 1903 and having a roadway width of 16 feet and a capacity of 6 tons, was purchased in December of 1922.

The Commission acquired but one bridge in 1923, the present Riegelsville Bridge, a three-span cable bridge built in 1903 having a roadway width of 16 feet and a capacity of 10 tons gross weight. The bridge lost one of its piers in the 1936 Delaware River ice flood and was closed for 9 months pending the replacement of the pier.

Not until 1925 did the Joint Commission get back into the buying market. In July, 1923, a wooden bridge between Stockton, New Jersey and Centre Bridge, Pennsylvania burned down. The Commission purchased, in November, 1925, such property and holdings as the Centre Bridge Company had in Pennsylvania and New Jersey plus the remains of the masonry. The present bridge was built by the Joint Commission in 1927 at the site of the old structure. It is the second of four modern free structures spanning the river.

From 1925 to 1927, the Joint Commission plunged into a valuation program for the purchase of the remaining bridges on the river. At the same time it entered into an extensive repair and replacement period having secured moneys from the State highway funds of the two States. In November, 1928, the Calhoun Street Bridge between Trenton and Morrisville was purchased. The iron bridge, as it exists today, has a roadway width of 18'-4" and a capacity of but 6 tons gross.

The present Portland-Columbia wooden bridge was purchased in May, 1927. The bridge was closed to all vehicular traffic on December 1, 1953. It is the last covered bridge on the Delaware River. While in service, it was restricted to a gross loading of 3 tons.

The month of June, 1929 ended with three additional bridges added to the holdings of the Joint Commission. On June 14, the Riverton-Belvidere Bridge, built in 1903, was acquired. The structure has a roadway width of 16 feet and a gross load capacity of 8 tons. On June 28, 1929, the Uhlertown-Frenchtown Bridge passed into the hands of the Commission. Two spans of the structure were lost in the flood of 1903 and replaced with steel. The remaining four spans were of timber. Within 2 years the timber spans commenced to fail. The entire structure was torn down and replaced, approaches rebuilt and a bridge house erected for the low sum of $96,500. Eighteen years later, 1949, the replacement of the floor alone cost the Commission $93,400.

On the same day, June 28, 1929, the Joint Commission took title to the Upper Black Eddy-Milford Bridge. The structure was a two-roadway timber bridge. A center truss divided the roadways. Four years later the bridge was closed to traffic. Many critical truss members were found in a rotted condition. Lives and personal property of those using the structure were at stake. The bridge was replaced at a cost of $90,000. In 1935, it was found necessary to underpin one of the piers. The present bridge is one of the four modern free structures on the river.

It was not until 1932 that the Joint Commission acquired, with one exception, the last of the privately-owned toll bridges spanning the Delaware River. On February 18, after many years of negotiation, the Commission acquired the abandoned D. L. & W. Railroad Bridge between Delaware, New Jersey and Upper Mt. Bethel, Pennsylvania. It had been converted into a highway bridge by private interests in 1915. The Commission's new bridges at Portland and Delaware Water Gap were built to serve substantially the same traffic that used the Upper Mt. Bethel, Delaware Bridge. The old railroad bridge was closed to all traffic on April 9, 1954.

On July 21, 1932, the Joint Commission acquired the Lumberville-Raven Rock Bridge, four spans of which were of timber construction and one of steel. In February, 1944, the Commission condemned the structure as unsafe and closed it to all vehicular traffic. In 1947 the entire structure was demolished, removed and replaced by a foot bridge.

There remains but one privately-owned toll bridge, the Dingman's Ferry Bridge. The Commission and the owners of the bridge have never been able to agree on a purchase price for the bridge.

Of the free bridges still standing, four are modern structures. On the other hand, the Calhoun Street Bridge between Trenton and Morrisville, the Yardley-Wilburtha Bridge, Washington Crossing Bridge, New Hope-Lambertville Bridge, Point Pleasant-Byram Bridge, the Riegelsville Bridge and the Riverton-Belvidere Bridge are structures of the past and cannot cope with the weight of vehicles licensed by the two States and permitted on the State highway systems. The life and usefulness of these structures are limited. While the Northampton Street Bridge connecting Easton and Philipsburg is limited to 7 tons, it is essentially a community transit facility.

As it is a legislative mandate for the Commission to provide safe and adequate structures across the Delaware River, the future of the narrow-roadway and low-capacity bridges is the responsibility of the Commission. It is most likely that in the not too distant future some or all of these bridges will have to be rebuilt to meet changing highway locations within and traffic movements between the two States.

The Commission has an obligation to provide facilities that will serve the best interests of the two States, thereby providing conveniences and safety to the greatest number of its citizens.

It is not the intention of the Commission to create the impression that the rebuilding of any free bridge has been determined at this time. However, the Commission is mindful of the fact that automobiles, trucks and buses—in fact, all highway vehicles—are being built as longer, wider and heavier means of transportation that require more modern service than the older facilities of the Commission are capable of providing.

The Commission humbly recognizes its responsibility to provide adequate bridges across the Delaware River whether they be planned for peacetime use or for use in times of national emergencies. It recognizes that it must plan for the future to meet the traffic problems which will occur in the next decade.

TOLL STRUCTURES

TRENTON, NEW JERSEY-MORRISVILLE, PENNSYLVANIA BRIDGE

At a location between the stone arch bridge of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company and the Lower Trenton Free Bridge and connecting U. S. Route 1 in New Jersey with U. S. Route 1 in Pennsylvania, the Commission constructed and is operating the second of five toll bridges built as part of the initial program to improve transportation facilities over the Delaware River between Pennsylvania and New Jersey. This facility was opened to public travel on December 1, 1952, prior to the completion of connecting highways, the Trenton Freeway and the Morrisville by-pass, in order to relieve bottlenecks and stop-and-go traffic movements in sections of the business districts of Trenton, New Jersey and Morrisville, Pennsylvania.

The Trenton Freeway, the main New Jersey highway traffic feeder to the Trenton-Morrisville Bridge, was opened to traffic by the New Jersey Highway Department on August 18, 1953. However, it was not until December 21, 1953, that the Morrisville by-pass reached a stage of completion where it was possible for the Pennsylvania Highway Department to open, partially, this artery to through traffic. The Trenton-Morrisville Bridge, therefore, did not derive the full benefit of the by-pass and its connections to U. S. Route 1 on the outskirts of Morrisville (Snipe's Corner) until August 24, 1954, a full year after the Trenton Freeway was opened.

The three links of this project, namely the Trenton Freeway, the Morrisville by-pass and the Commission's facility offer to the traveling public a limited access highway five miles in length by-passing the business and residential districts of Trenton and Morrisville. This highway has no grade crossings nor traffic lights; hence, it has free-flowing traffic. The completion and full use of the highway links of this project are reflected in the volume of traffic passing over the Trenton-Morrisville Bridge. During 1953, before the Trenton Freeway and the Morrisville by-pass were opened, the bridge carried 1,337,395 vehicles for the twelve-month period. However, during the year 1954 with full benefit of the Trenton Freeway and partial benefit of the Morrisville by-pass, the bridge carried 2,913,214 vehicles, an increase of 117.8%. Traffic crossing the Lower Trenton and Calhoun Street Free Bridges decreased during the year 1954, an indication that traffic is moving away from the two free bridges and taking advantage of the free flowing, uninterrupted movement of traffic offered by using the toll bridge and connecting approach highways. The Commission has developed a program to sell to the Trenton-Morrisville commuters and trucking companies operating on the eastern seaboard the advantages to be gained in time saved by using the toll bridge. There is every reason to believe that traffic on the bridge will continue to increase from year to year, a good portion of which will be induced traffic created by improvements to highways and the development of industries, shopping centers and housing projects of mushrooming "Delaware Valley U. S. A." As highways in the two States have a direct bearing on the volume of traffic crossing the Trenton-Morrisville Toll Bridge the status and improvements to highways related to the bridge are here made part of this report.

The New Jersey Highway Department has under construction a second section of the Freeway, extending from Strawberry Street in the City of Trenton to Whitehead Road, a point northeast of the Trenton City line. The section under contract is 0.965 miles in length and is being constructed at a cost of $2,400,000. When this, the second section of the Trenton Freeway has been completed and opened to traffic, it will eliminate the use of the Brunswick traffic circle on the part of foreign interstate traffic as well as local interstate traffic which heretofore used the circle. The New Jersey Highway Department, in its long-range program, has also provided for construction of a third section of the Freeway, extending from Whitehead Road to U. S. Route 1 in the vicinity of Bakerville, Lawrence Township, 5 miles south of the Penns Neck traffic circle. The ultimate Freeway, the main New Jersey Approach highway to the Trenton-Morrisvile Bridge, will then extend from Conover's Alley, Trenton to Bakerville, the consequence of which will be a four-lane dual highway by-passing built up areas in Trenton, 6¼ miles in length, constructed at an approximate cost to the State of New Jersey of $18,200,000. The completion of the New Jersey Highway program in conjunction with the Commission's facility and the Pennsylvania by-pass will afford a limited access highway over eight miles in length, a time and money saver to all who make use of it.

The Pennsylvania Highway Department has relocated and is rebuilding U. S. Route 13 between Bristol, Pennsylvania and U. S. Route 1. The interchange connection of Route 13 with Route 1 is located approximately one mile south of the Trenton-Morrisville Toll Bridge. It is expected that, when this route has been entirely completed and opened to traffic, it will provide a feeder to the Trenton-Morrisville Bridge second only to U. S. Route 1.

The Pennsylvania Turnpike Commission has completed its Delaware River Turnpike extension to a point in the vicinity of Bristol, Pennsylvania and has provided an interchange connection to U. S. Route 1 designated as Interchange No. 28, "Philadelphia." This interchange is 12 miles south of the Trenton-Morrisville Bridge. To the motorists who desire to use the Morrisville by-pass and the Trenton Freeway, the interchange will afford a means of leaving the Turnpike and traveling over U. S. Route 1 through Pennsylvania and New Jersey to the Holland and Lincoln Tunnels as well as to the George Washington Bridge. Motorists will find appropriate Delaware River Joint Toll Bridge Commission route signs and trail-blazers between this interchange and the Trenton-Morrisville Bridge.

The development of new highways in Pennsylvania and New Jersey during the past year connected directly or indirectly to the Bridge Commission's facility should produce an increase in traffic crossing the Trenton-Morrisville Bridge.

Construction of this facility was started in the fall of 1950 and completed in the fall of 1952. The overall length of the project is 5,722 feet. The river crossing is a four-lane deck girder structure 1,322 feet in length from abutment to abutment and carries two 24-foot roadways separated by a 4-foot medial divider and has two 3-foot sidewalks.

The entire facility was constructed with moneys derived from the sale of revenue bonds, amortization of which is solely dependent upon revenues received from the use of the facility. Administration, operation and maintenance expenses are met from tolls collected at the facility.

EASTON, PENNSYLVANIA-PHILLIPSBURG, NEW JERSEY BRIDGE

The need for this facility was apparent in July, 1926. At that time the roadway of the present Northampton Street Bridge connecting Easton and Phillipsburg was being rebuilt. Because of traffic congestion created by this work, the members of the Joint Commission and the representatives of the communities bordering the Delaware River realized that serious consideration should be given to the construction of an additional facility between Easton and Phillipsburg. All interested parties realized that considerable time would be consumed in making engineering surveys and traffic studies so that a comprehensive report could be prepared as a basis of deliberation to develop a course of action that would be acceptable to the State of New Jersey, the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and the citizens of the two communities involved.

The Joint Commission's authority, as set up by Legislative Acts of 1912 and 1913 and subsequent legislation, was restricted to acquiring privately-owned bridges spanning the Delaware River and maintaining them thereafter. It had no authority to construct additional bridges. The construction of an additional bridge between Easton and Phillipsburg required legislative authority.

The Joint Commission secured authority from the Legislature of Pennsylvania in 1929 and the Legislature of New Jersey in 1930 to proceed with borings, surveys, engineering studies, investigations and other matters incidental thereto for building an additional bridge between Easton, Pennsylvania and Phillipsburg, New Jersey. The Commission was directed to report its findings to the Legislatures. A public hearing was held at the office of the Easton Chamber of Commerce which was well attended by local citizens and representatives of business organizations. The result of this hearing was the selection of a line for a proposed second free bridge spanning the Delaware River between the City of Easton and the Town of Phillipsburg.

Once the line of the second bridge had been decided upon, the Engineering Staff of the Joint Commission proceeded with borings, surveys and investigations. An engineering report was submitted to this Commission with statements as to cost and construction details for a free bridge spanning the Delaware River. The location of the proposed bridge was in general at the site selected some years later for the construction of the present toll bridge.

The Presidents of the Pennsylvania and New Jersey Commissions, in accordance with the mandate of the legislative acts of 1929 and 1930, submitted a report to the Legislatures in 1931 setting forth the findings of the Joint Commission. The cost of the new bridge, including the cost of lands for the right-of-way, was estimated to be $7,200,000.

The Legislatures took no concurrent action towards appropriating such a sum of money. However, the Legislature of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, realizing the serious Easton-Phillipsburg traffic problem, enacted legislation approved by Governor Gifford Pinchot on June 25, 1931 creating the Delaware River Joint Toll Bridge Commission. This act of the Legislature recognized the fact that additional bridge facilities between the two States would be required for the accommodation of the public and the development of the two States. It, therefore, mandated the newly-created Commission to develop such additional bridge facilities without the expenditures of large sums from public revenues. The Legislature of New Jersey passed concurrent legislation approved by Governor A. Harry Moore on June 11, 1934. On December 18, 1934. Governor Moore entered into a compact or argreement with Governor Gifford Pinchot of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania completing State legislation. Congress approved the compact on August 30, 1935. Congressional action sealed the mandate of the State Legislatures pertaining to the construction of a second bridge between Easton and Phillipsburg. Overnight the manner of providing facilities across the Delaware River changed from that of constructing free facilities to that of constructing toll facilities for the express purpose of eliminating the expenditure of large sums of public revenues. It should be said as a matter of history that the Commission, as constituted and set up by the acts of the Legislatures of 1912 in New Jersey and 1913 in Pennsylvania and amendments thereto, desired to serve the public and the interest of the two States by constructing free bridge facilities. The ever-increasing volume of highway traffic and the ever-increasing cost of building bridge facilities to take care of changed highway traffic dictated otherwise.

The mandate of the Legislatures being established, the Commission proceeded with all the ramifications involved in the construction of a toll facility in competition with a free bridge spanning the river a thousand feet away. Financing the new structure became a problem. Traffic reports indicated the new facility could be built and operated on a self-sustaining basis. Revenue bonds in the amount of $2,500,000 were eventually sold at an interest rate of 4¼%. After three years of operation the facility lived up to and exceeded traffic and revenue estimates to such an extent that the Commission was able to refund its original bond issue and sell a new issue of revenue bonds in the amount of $2,575,000 at an interest rate of 2¼% for 660 ($660,000) bonds and an interest rate of 2% for the remainder. The credit and operation policies of the Commission had been established.

The Easton-Phillipsburg Toll Bridge, known at the time of construction as the Bushkill Street Bridge, was the first toll bridge facility constructed by the Delaware River Joint Toll Bridge Commission under the mandates of the Legislatures of the two States. The actual construction of the bridge was started at the site of the New Jersey abutment on August 19, 1936. The entire project was completed in January, 1938 and opened for public use on January 17, 1938. The facility connects U. S. Route 22, Blue Star Route in New Jersey, with U. S. Route 22 in Pennsylvania.

A program of improving the approaches to the bridge in Phillipsburg and Easton was developed in the latter part of 1940 and postponed by World War II. In 1945, the Commission rebuilt the New Jersey Approach to the bridge as part of the New Jersey Highway Department program of rebuilding New Jersey Route 24. The highway, after being rebuilt, became a section of U. S. Route 22 as well as New Jersey Route 24.

The rebuilding and extension of the Pennsylvania Approach in Easton did not get under way until 1950. The new approach work was started in May, 1950 and completed and opened to traffic in 1951, The work was done, including the acquisition of properties, at a cost of $3,-200,000. In order to provide access to the new approach, the Commission constructed a temporary connecting road to U. S. 22 and to the city streets of Easton.

The long-awaited final stage of the Pennsylvania Approach highway to the bridge was the reconstruction of U. S. Route 22 from the westerly end of the Commission's approach to the outskirts of Allentown, Pennsylvania. This highway, planned and built by the Pennsylvania Highway Department at a cost of $20,000,000, is of limited access design by-passing the cities of Easton, Bethlehem and Allentown. The Highway Department has provided 13 interchanges along the route with direct connections to all main highways between Easton and Allentown. The Commission has provided an interchange at the westerly end of the bridge providing direct connections to city streets leading to hotels, the business and residential sections of the city as well as main highway routes through the city.

The Easton-Bethlehem-Allentown by-pass was opened to traffic on August 3, 1954, and dedicated by the Governor of the Commonwealth on September 29, 1954. The Pennsylvania Highway Department has established a 60-mile speed limit on the new highway. Prior to the Construction of this new limited access highway, the traveler spent an hour or more in traveling between the City of Easton and the outskirts of Allentown. The new highway has reduced this time to 20-25 minutes.

Improvements to U. S. 22 in New Jersey have not lagged. The New Jersey Highway Department has recently completed the construction of two additional lanes of the highway extending from the Ingersoll-Rand plant in Phillipsburg to Straw Church, a distance of 1½ miles.

In New Jersey there remains but one section of two-lane highway between the toll plaza of the bridge in Phillipsburg and the New York Port Authority's Holland Tunnel, namely a section between Still Valley and West Portal. This section is six miles in length. However, it is scheduled to be realigned and reconstructed. The New Jersey Highway Department has provided for an expenditure of approximately $1,000,000 in its 1955-1956 program for acquiring the right-of-way and grading the section. The new highway will be a dual four-lane freeway. Construction of the project will involve an over-all expenditure by the State of New Jersey of approximately $8,000,000.

Year by year improvements made by the Commission of its facilities and the reconstruction of U. S. Route 22 by the Highway Departments of the two States have resulted in a considerable saving of travel time between New York and Harrisburg. Improvements to the highway have enhanced the scenic beauty of the countryside through the two States. Travelers will find it to their advantage to travel Route U. S. 22 between New York and Harrisburg. It is the shortest route between the two cities.

Transportation companies and the motorists who travel the Pennsylvania Turnpike either in an easterly or westerly direction and who desire to take advantages offered by using U. S. Route 22 between Harrisburg and New York will find it convenient to leave the turnpike at Interchange 17, "Gettysburg Pike" or Interchange 18, "Harrisburg-West Shore." These interchanges are indicated on the Commission's map—Main Highways to the Delaware River Bridges.

PORTLAND, PENNSYLVANIA-COLUMBIA, NEW JERSEY BRIDGE

At the southerly fringe of the Pocono Mountain region and between Portland, Pennsylvania and Columbia, New Jersey, the Commission constructed and is operating the third of its five toll facilities. The original river crossing opened to traffic bewteen the two communities in 1869 was a wooden covered bridge which still exists, the last across the Delaware River. The bridge will be maintained as a pedestrian crossing so long as the lives of the people who use it are not in jeopardy and, in the opinion of the Commission, does not become a serious factor to the safety of other property, not only of the Commission, but of the communities along the Delaware River. The preservation of the economic life of these communities and their surrounding territories was one factor which led the Commission to construct a modern bridge across, the Delaware River between Portland and Columbia. Timber bridges have an unknown span of life, especially so, along the Delaware River where floods and ice flows have taken their toll of similar structures.

The new Portland-Columbia Bridge, opened to traffic on December 1, 1953, is for all practical purposes a structure serving the local people. The low commutation rate of $.05 per crossing for passenger cars was established by the Commission for the benefit of local residents. It is of interest to note that the existing covered bridge was a toll structure from the day it was opened to traffic in 1869 to the day it was purchased by the Commission, May 2, 1927. The toll rate for passenger cars at the time the Commission purchased the bridge was $.25 per crossing. The toll rate for the large trucks was $1.00 per crossing. The old records of the original bridge company tell us that one making a round trip in any one day paid a commutation toll rate of $.40 for the two crossings. Today the Commission offers to the local people eight trips for $.40 instead of two. In appraising the benefits derived from the use of a modern structure at the commuter's toll rate set by the Commission, the value of the dollar as it was 1869 or even in 1927 in relation to the value of a dollar today should not be over-looked.

The flow of traffic across the Delaware River moving between the metropolitan district of northern New Jersey and New York City has been tempered by the traveling advantages of a four-lane dual freeway constructed by the New Jersey Highway Department along the easterly side of the Delaware River. It had been expected that greater use of the Portland-Columbia Bridge and the Pennsylvania Highway through the Delaware Water Gap would be made by both commercial and pleasure vehicles. Apparently the public, confronted with the advantages of a free-way, have one thought in mind—traveling to and through the Delaware Water Gap in the least possible time.

As to the future, traffic movements will change probably to some degree and motorists traveling through the Delaware Water Gap will use the highway in Pennsylvania in one direction and return through the Gap over the New Jersey Freeway. The scenic beauty of the Delaware Water Gap from either shore of the river should not be overlooked. Regardless of the direction of the flow of traffic, it is a satisfaction to realize that should disaster strike the old covered bridge between Portland and Columbia, the residents and business houses of the two communities will always have a means of crossing the Delaware River whether on foot or by automobile.

During the past year 713,546 vehicles used the bridge. Of this number 321,995 vehicles paid the commuter's rate.

Previous Annual Reports covered the early history of transportation across the Delaware River in the vicinity of the Portland-Columbia communities, as well as general facts related to the construction of the Commission's new modern facility. A resume of pertinent data pertaining to the facility would not be amiss. The structure is located approximately 1,400 feet south of the present covered bridge. It is a link between U. S. Route 611 in Pennsylvania and U. S. Routes 611 and 46 in New Jersey. The bridge is composed of ten girder spans having an overall length of 1,306 feet from abutment to abutment. The structure has a roadway width between curbs of 25 feet, with one five-foot concrete sidewalk on the downstream side of the bridge and a safety walk on the upstream side of the structure. Eastbound and westbound ramp connections between the bridge and Alternate Route U. S. 611 have been provided for traffic using the bridge and the Pennsylvania Highway through the Water Gap. On and off ramp connections between U. S. Route 611 and Alternate U. S. Route 611 have been provided for traffic other than bridge traffic which is destined for Portland or the Water Gap over Pennsylvania Highways. On the New Jersey side of the river, on and off ramps have been provided between the bridge and U. S. Routes 611 and 46. Ramps have been constructed for connections to New Jersey Route 94 and the streets of Columbia.

DELAWARE WATER GAP BRIDGE

Spanning the Delaware River between the Kittatinny Mountain Range is the fourth toll bridge facility constructed and presently being operated by the Delaware River Joint Toll Bridge Commission. The bridge and approach highways lie between the southerly and northerly limits of the Delaware Water Gap, reputed to be the eighth scenic wonder of the world. The location and construction of a bridge in the vicinity of the Delaware Water Gap had been under consideration by the Commission for many years. Engineering surveys and studies were started prior to World War II. The Commission for years was confronted with the problem of moving traffic from one State to another over bridges inadequate to carry modern-day traffic. The Commission, as well as the Pennsylvania Highway Department, was deeply concerned with traffic conditions existing in the Borough of Portland and the Delaware Water Gap.

Two traffic problems confronted the Commission. The first of these was to locate a crossing of the Delaware River in the vicinity of Portland to provide a bridge capable of carrying through commercial and passenger car traffic between Pennsylvania and New Jersey as well as providing the local residents with a proper facility to replace the Portland-Columbia wooden covered bridge, which, in the opinion of the Engineers of the Commission, had served its purpose and was no longer adequate and safe for even light commercial and pleasure car traffic.

The second problem confronting the Commission was to locate and construct a modern river crossing that would carry heavy commercial traffic as well as pleasure car traffic originating at and destined for points in New Jersey, Pennsylvania, New York and, in general, the eastern seaboard. The location of the river crossing had to be such as would eliminate the traffic bottlenecks on the Pennsylvania side of the river within the Delaware Water Gap area.

The second problem also involved the location and construction of a river crossing suitable for the movement of military personnel and equipment between New Jersey and Pennsylvania. Further, with full knowledge of the planning of national defense officials, the Commission was confronted with the problem of providing a crossing whereby mass movements of peopple from metropolitan New York and northern New Jersey areas to the Pocono Mountain region could be accomplished in the least possible time. The Department of Public Roads recognized the vital necessity of a river crossing in the Water Gap area as a link in the military highway system of the eastern part of the country and, because of the military necessity of a modern river crossing, approved a construction program of the Commission involving the location and construction of the Delaware Water Gap Bridge.

The Delaware Water Gap Bridge was built to provide a river crossing which would serve substantially the same traffic as that served by the bridge between Delaware, New Jersey and Upper Mt. Bethel, Pennsylvania maintained and operated by the Commission. At the same time, the bridge had to be located and built to provide a by-pass of the Pennsylvania highway through the Borough of Portland and the Delaware Water Gap. The elimination of the Portland and Delaware Water Gap traffic bottlenecks was a "must", if the mandates of the legislative acts and the provisions of the compact between the two States were to be fulfilled.

The bridge between Delaware, New Jersey and Upper Mt. Bethel, Pennsylvania was a railroad bridge built in 1890 by the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad Company. As the length and weight of the company's rolling stock increased, the bridge reached a stage where it was no longer suitable for railroad operations. It was abandoned and a new bridge was built by the railroad company north of the original structure. The abandoned bridge was converted into a highway bridge in 1915 by private interest. The Commission purchased this structure in 1932. The physical characteristics and condition of the bridge have been commented on in the Annual Reports to the Governors and Legislatures of Pennsylvania and New Jersey since 1949.

Year after year, requests were made by the Commission for appropriations to replace part of the steel in the floor system, to replace the roadway and to revamp the entire expansion system of the structure. The Commission was unable to obtain funds for the rehabilitation of the structure. The cost of needed repairs to the bridge increased from year to year because of a changing material and labor market. Traffic increased annually and commercial vehicles became heavier and heavier. In addition, the speed of vehicles increased as improvements were made to both commrcial trucks and passenger cars. Improvements of highways leading to the bridge induced increased speed of the trucks and cars approaching the throats of the bridge. The two-lane centered truss converted railroad bridge, in the opinion of the Commission, became an obsolete structure. Because of traffic conditions through the Borough of Portland and through the Delaware Water Gap, it would have been unsound judgment to replace this structure—the converted railroad bridge—at any point along the Delaware River south of the Delaware Water Gap.

The Commission was advised by its engineers that transportation problems could no longer be considered from a strictly localized point of view. The State boundary lines were no longer a factor in the determination and planning of bridge and highway facilities. Transportation as of today and for the future had to be considered on a national basis. Considering and planning crossings of the Delaware River on any other basis would be a fallacy.

Engineers engaged by the Pennsylvania Highway Department made a thorough traffic study of the Portland and Delaware Water Gap area. An engineering report submitted to the Secretary of the Highway Department recommended that a new bridge be built between Portland and Columbia and a new bridge be built between Pennsylvania and New Jersey north of the point of the Delaware Water Gap with a connecting highway paralleling the Delaware River. The Consulting Engineers of the Commission made an independent survey and reported on the traffic problem confronting the Commission. They recommended the construction of two bridges—one between Portland and Columbia and the other at the Delaware Water Gap. The reports of the two independent engineering firms confirmed the thinking of the Commission with respect to the location of the river crossings in the Delaware Water Gap area.

One of the basic factors in the Commission's program of constructing not only the Delaware Water Gap Bridge but also the Portland and the Milford Bridges was the approval of the program on the part of the State Highway Departments of Pennsylvania and New Jersey.

The engineering report prepared for the Secretary of Highways of Pennsylvania and the report of the Consulting Engineers of the Commission were submitted to the Commissioner of the New Jersey Highways Department. The New Jersey Highway Department made an independent survey of the area along the Delaware River between Columbia, New Jersey and the Delaware Water Gap. The construction of the bridges and highways in the Portland-Columbia, Delaware Water Gap area resulted in a program of cooperation between the New Jersey Highway Department, the Pennsylvania Highway Department and the Commission. The New Jersey Highway Department constructed a four-lane Freeway between Columbia, New Jersey and the Delaware Water Gap. This Freeway, one of the most scenic highways in New Jersey, was built at a cost to the State of approximately $4,400,000. The Pennsylvania Highway Department constructed a limited access highway between the Pennsylvania Approach of the bridge and U. S. Route 611 with connecting ramps to Pennsylvania Route 612 and 402.

After a full year of operation, the decision of the Commission, concurred in by the Highway Departments, to construct bridges at locations recommended by the Engineers cannot be questioned. Bottlenecks and traffic delays through the Borough of Portland and the Delaware Water Gap have been entirely eliminated. Military forces have adequate bridges at their disposal and mass movements of people from metropolitan districts in time of disaster can be accomplished without fear of bottlenecks. road blocks or natural interferences at the present time.

We are living in an Atomic Age with construction of highways, bridges and turnpikes inadequate for the present automobile age. After experiences during World War II and the Korean War in evacuating people, we should be concerned with what could take place in case of an atomic attack on New York City, northern New Jersey or Philadelphia. In 1954, there were 58 million motor vehicles registered in the United States. In 1965 it is predicted that there will be 81 million cars registered in the country, meaning that there will be two cars or trucks on the highways which are being built under present highway programs to carry one. In 1974 it is predicted that there will be 92 million cars registered in the United States. Unless there is a decided acceleration of construction of highways, bridges and turnpikes, there will be four cars on the highways occupying the space of one.

The Delaware Water Gap and other similar gaps in the Kittatinny Mountain Range and the Blue Mountain Range in this region have been used as gateways through the mountains since the days of the Indian, whose trails were succeeded by the paths and roads made by the early settlers in their movement westward into the lowlands of the interior over routes that were followed by railroads and improved highways.

A barrier of long standing to the development of the Stroudsburg and the Pocono Mountains region has been removed. The Delaware Water Gap Bridge is the new Gateway to the Pocono Mountain area.

MILFORD, PENNSYLVANIA-MONTAGUE, NEW JERSEY BRIDGE

The northerly Gateway to the Pocono Mountain region is the new Milford, Pennsylvania-Montague, New Jersey Toll Bridge. It is the fifth and last toll facility constructed and in operation under the Commission's initial program for the development of the modern transportation facilities across the Delaware River.

It is the first time in history that the Delaware River in the Milford-Montague area has been spanned by a bridge with sufficient capacity to carry commercial traffic routed over the highways leading to a river crossing between the two communities. The new bridge replaces the horse and buggy-haywagon bridge of 1889 vintage. The masonry carrying that superstructure dates back to 1840. The antiquated structure had a gross weight capacity of five tons. No longer will weekend and holiday motorists have to travel home with crumpled fenders, scratched bodies or the fear thereof. The roadway of the old bridge was only 13'-11" wide. The automobile was not a problem in the year 1836 nor even in 1889, and little or no consideration was given to the location of the original bridge across the Delaware River nor were the roads leading to the bridge a factor in its location. Convenience and the location of the old ferry appeared to have established the original bridge location.

The new Milford-Montague River crossing is located 1,600 feet below the bridge it replaced. It was built between the highlands of the two communities. The approaches to the bridge were built through woodlands giving the entire facility a naturally landscaped setting.

The location of the new bridge was governed by the location of U. S. Route 206 in New Jersey, 209 in Pennsylvania and the topography of lands in the immediate area of Milford and Montague.

The volume of traffic crossing the old structure, based on Commission records since 1932, New Jersey and Pennsylvania Highway Department classification counts and traffic counts on the principal highways in Pennsylvania and New Jersey projected to cover a 33-year period, governed the number of lanes on the bridge. Ice conditions in the Delaware River were factors in the design of the substructure and superstructure. The clearance of the roadway above the surface of the river was governed by the proposed development of the Delaware River as a water supply source for New York City, cities in northern New Jersey, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania and cities in the State of Delaware. The Interstate Commission on the Delaware River Basin (Incodel), established by the Legislatures of New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania in 1949, adopted a report prepared by engineers of that Commission on the utilization of the water of the Delaware River Basin. The report recommended the construction of a dam at Wallpack Bend, Bushkill, Pennsylvania creating the Wallpack Bend Reservoir. The dam would form a reservoir 26 miles long extending from Bushkill, Pennsylvania to Port Jervis, New York. The Milford-Montague Bridge, as built, is well above pool elevation as set out in the report.

The bridge is a three-span deck truss structure carrying a roadway 24 feet in width, two 3'-6" sidewalks, and has an over-all length of 1,150 feet. The entire project extending from a junction with New Jersey Highway Department Route 206 in Montague to a junction with U. S. Route 209 in Pennsylvania is 5,700 feet in length.

The bridge, designed by the J. E. Greiner Company and built by the Bethlehem Steel Company, was selected by the American Institute of Steel Construction as one of the ten most beautiful steel bridges opened to traffic in 1953.

The demands for a modern crossing of the Delaware River between Milford and Montague have flowed into the Commission's office for many years. As far back as 1927, the Commission commenced surveying the Milford-Montague area for the purpose of locating and constructing a new bridge over the river. Preliminary designs and estimates were developed but funds for the construction of a free bridge did not exist. The public contented itself with a horse and buggy structure nursed along by the Commission for 31 years. The old structure was a damper to the development and life of the two river communities. There appears to be no question but that the old structure would still be in use had not the Legislatures of the two States mandated the Commission to build a 20th century bridge, to be financed, built and operated on a pay-as-you-go basis. The failure of the old bridge was inevitable.

The construction of this bridge will, in a relatively short time, lead to extensive development of the vacation lands of Sussex County, New Jersey, Pike County, Pennsylvania and New York Counties bordering the Delaware River. Located but 75 miles from Times Square, New York City, the Milford-Montague Bridge has opened up a vast area of Pennsylvania and New York for the weekend traveler or to the vacationer who has time on his hands and desires to see a part of scenic Pennsylvania and New York and the valley through which the Delaware River flows.

The Pennsylvania Highway Department is resurfacing and reconstructing U. S. Route 6 from the heart of the Borough of Milford westwardly to Shohalo Falls, a ten-mile stretch. The Department has scheduled the work to be completed July 1, 1955. Motorists will find well-paved modern roads leading to the bridge in both States.

The Commission, recognizing the fact that the local people had for many years the use of a river crossing dating back to 1841 supplemented by a ferry at various times, established a $.05 commuter's toll rate for local people on the new Milford-Montague Bridge.

While referring to the earlier bridge at the Milford-Montague location, it might be of interest to learn what it cost the settlers of these two communities to cross the Delaware River in times gone by. The toll rates on the early pay-as-you-go bridge were not cheap, even the person who walked had to pay.

Records of the old Milford-Montague Bridge Company listed toll rates for foot passengers at $.02 per crossing. The toll for a coach, landau, phaeton or other pleasure carriages with two horses was $.25 per crossing. The passage of wagons with two horses called for a toll of $.25. A chaise, riding chair, sulky, cart or other two-wheel carriages or a sleigh or sled were listed at $.15. A single horse and rider paid the small toll of $.05. The operator of a one-seated automobile paid a toll of $.25. If the automobile had two seats, the toll was $.40. An automobile with three seats was classified the same as an automobile with two seats. A person riding a motorcycle paid a toll of $.05 per crossing and a person who rode a bicycle paid $.02. Travel over the Delaware River was rather expensive in by-gone days compared to the toll the traveler pays to cross the new Milford-Montague Bridge.

Gentlemen:

The Trust Indenture dated November 1, 1949, securing Delaware River Joint Toll Bridge Commission Bridge Revenue Bonds (Series A) provides, under Section 504, as follows:

"It shall be the duty of the Consulting Engineers employed by the Commission under the provisions of Section 706 of this Indenture, among such other duties as may be imposed upon them by the Commission or by this Indenture, to make an inspection at least once a year of each bridge in the Project and, on or before the 1st day of October in each year, to submit to the Commission a report setting forth (a) their findings whether each such bridge has been maintained in good repair, working order and condition, (b) their advices and recommendations as to the proper maintenance, repair and operation of each such bridge during the ensuing fiscal year and an estimate of the amount of money necessary for such purposes, (c) their advices and recommendations as to the insurance to be carried under the provisions of Article VII of this Indenture, and (d) their recommendations as to the amount that should be deposited during such fiscal year to the credit of the Reserve Maintenance Fund for the purposes set forth in Section 508 of this Article. Copies of such reports shall be filed with the Trustee and mailed to the principal underwriter, each registered owner of bonds then outstanding at his address as it appears on the registration books, and all other bondholders who shall have filed their names and addresses with the Secretary of the Commission for such purpose."

In accordance with the above requirements, we conducted the Seventeenth Annual Inspection of the Bushkill Street Bridge across the Delaware River from Easton, Pennsylvania to Phillipsburg, New Jersey, the Second Annual Inspection of the bridge between Trenton, New Jersey and Morrisville, Pennsylvania, and the First Annual Inspections of the three recently completed up-river bridges, namely, the Portland-Columbia Bridge, the Delaware Water Gap Bridge, and the Milford-Montague

Bridge. The Easton-Phillipsburg Bridge was inspected during the period August 2 and 3, the Trenton-Morrisville Bridge August 4 and 5, and the Portland-Columbia Bridge, Delaware Water Gap Bridge, and Milford-Montague Bridge, August 16-20, 1954. For the purpose of continuity this Report is entitled, "Seventeenth Annual Inspection Report."

In Exhibits I to V we have submitted, in detail, our recommendations concerning the maintenance required on the five bridges. While the work performed by the Commission's forces in keeping the facilities in very good condition is of high order, there are items which require maintenance on a routine schedule and to which we have called attention.

As signified by our letter, dated July 28, 1954, we have reviewed the types and amounts of insurance carried by the Commission on the five toll bridges. We find that the coverages are in accordance with the requirements of Article VII of the Trust Indenture and adequately protect the interests of the Commission.

Very truly yours,

J. E. GREINER COMPANY

TOLL BRIDGES

Revenue and Expense for Year 1954

Redemption of Bonds

For the first full year's operations of all five toll bridges the Gross Income from all sources (excluding Construction Fund Investments) was $2,669,900.20. Toll Revenues were $2,649,949.25 and Other Income $19,950.95, principally Income from Investments.

The Expenses for the year were $1,179,436.50, Interest on Debt amounted to $675,160.78, and Capital Expenditures totalled $54,766.94.

The Net Revenues resulting were $760,535.98 for the year 1954.

In accordance with the Trust Indenture transfers were made to the Revenue, Sinking Fund and Reserve Maintenance Accounts. The increase in these respective accounts from Revenues for the years 1954 and 1953 follows:

	Year 1954	Year 1953
Revenue Account	$128,300.53	$ 78,181.13
Bond Service Account	240,326.91	12,067.69
Reserve Interest Account	25,397.84	26,771.64
Redemption Account	134,279.47	37,917.90
Reserve Maintenance Account	177,464.29	139,587.42
Reserve Maintenance Account (Capital Expenditures)	54,766.94	2,286.25
Totals	$760,535.98	$296,812.03

There was retired during the year 1954 $22,000.00 Series "A" Bonds and $118,000.00 Series "B" Bonds. To December 31, 1954, $252,000.00 Series "A" Bonds and $324,000.00 Series "B" Bonds, or a total of $576,000.00 of bonds originally issued have been retired.

We have examined the balance sheet of the Delaware River Joint Toll Bridge Commission—Toll Bridges as of December 31, 1954, and the related statement of net revenues for the year then ended. Our examination was made in accordance with generally accepted auditing standards, and accordingly included such tests of the accounting records and such other auditing procedure as we considered necessary in the circumstances.

In our opinion, the accompanying balance sheet, statement of net revenues and supporting schedules, when read in conjunction with the notes to financial statements, present fairly the financial position of the Delaware River Joint Toll Bridge Commission in respect to its toll bridges in operation at December 31, 1954, and the net revenues from such operations for the year ended that date, in conformity with accounting principles and procedures set forth in Note 1.

NOTES TO FINANCIAL STATEMENTS

Note 1: Statement of Accounting Principles and Procedures:

(a) The Delaware River Joint Toll Bridge Commission was created as a corporate instrumentality in 1934 by compact between the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and the State of New Jersey with the approval of Congress. The Commission has no stockholders or equity holders; and all revenues or other cash received must be dispersed for specific purposes in accordance with provisions of the agreement with holders of its bonds. The accounting procedures followed by the Commission, other than those hereinafter described in this note, are in conformity with generally accepted accounting principles. The variances from generally accepted accounting principles (outlined in the following paragraph (b) of this note) are based on the provisions set forth in Trust Indenture dated November 1, 1949, as amended, which represents the agreement with its bondholders.

(b)Monthly deductions are made from net revenues in excess of a minimum amount retainable for working capital, for "Sinking Fund" payments to provide for current and future funded debt interest and redemptions, and for payments to the "Reserve Maintenance Fund" to provide for expenditures which, in the judgment of the Consulting Engineers, are required to mainitain in good condition all facilities. Such latter expenditures are chargeable to the Fund and may include renewals and replacements, capital expenditures as well as other costs authorized by the Indenture to be paid therefrom. The Trust Indenture stipulates the amounts and the order of distribution to the Sinking and Reserve Maintenance Funds of such monthly deductions from revenue. Interest earned on Fund investments is to be credited, under the Indenture, to the respective Fund accounts.

Other than the deduction from revenues for purposes of the "Reserve Maintenance Fund," as explained in the preceding paragraph, no specific provision has been made for depreciation of facilities, nor has a specific allowance for depreciation been established.

(c) "Investment in Facilities" represents the amounts expended to place the completed facilities into operation and the cost to date of the projects under construction, net of minor proceeds received from sale or disposition of miscellaneous items of equipment.

"Investment in Facilities" also includes: (1) Interest expense incurred in connection with bonds and notes issued for construction purposes during the period of construction, refinancing costs (less net premiums received on sale of such obligations and income earned on unexpended construction funds), amounting to $1,068,336.19, and (2) Preliminary survey costs and equipment purchases from revenues, amounting to $393,911.43.

(d) In the opinion of its General Counsel, the Commission is not subject to Federal, State or local taxes.

Note 2: Unexpended and pending commitments for certain costs in connection with the full completion of bridges now in operation are not reflected in the accompanying statements on the theory that the funded debt originally issued reflects the considered estimates of the Consulting Engineers as to total cost.

On December 1, 1954, Johnson, Drake and Piper, Inc., insituted suit in the United States District Court for the District of New Jersey against the Delaware River Joint Toll Bridge Commission, claiming $1,300,000 for alleged additional substructure costs in connection with construction of the Portland-Columbia, Delaware Water Gap, and Milford-Montague Toll Bridges. The Commission's attorneys and engineers are preparing an answer in this suit, denying liability.

Note 3: On February 14, 1955, the Supreme Court of United States denied application for writ of certiorari in the decision handed down by the United States District Court for the District of New Jersey in the matter of Barton et al. v. Delaware River Joint Toll Bridge Commission, relating to the closing of the Delaware-Upper Mount Bethel Township Bridge. In compliance with Court order, receipts, when requested, were issued by the Commission for tolls paid for passage of licensed Pennsylvania and New Jersey vehicles of no more than 15 tons at the Portland-Columbia Toll Bridge only, effective April 8, 1954. Pending final Court action there has been set aside from the revenues of such bridge to December 31, 1954, $3,649.55 for possible refunds of the aforementioned receipts. Inasmuch as Barton et al. have a period of twenty-five days from February 14, 1955, in which to request the United States Supreme Court to review its decision, the matter will not be finally closed until the expiration of such period.

Note 4: As of December 31, 1954, the Commission's outstanding funded debt was as follows:

$14,248,000 2:30 pct. Bridge Revenue Bonds, Series A, dated November 1, 1949, due November 1, 1984, interest payable semiannually on May 1 and November 1, redeemable in whole at a premium of 4 pct. to November 1, 1958, and at lesser rates to November 1, 1973, or redeemable in part at a premium of 3 pct. to November 1, 1958, and at lesser rates to November 1, 1973.

$14,676,000 2.35 pct. Bridge Revenue Bonds, Series B, dated May 1, 1951, due November 1, 1984, interest payable semiannually on May 1 and November 1, redeemable in whole at a premium of 4 pct. to November 1, 1958, and at lesser rates to November 1, 1973, or redeemable in part at a premium of 3 pct. to November 1, 1958, and at lesser rates to November 1, 1973.

PURPOSE AND OBJECTIVES

By legislative authority, the purpose and objectives of the Commission are to encourage and develop the participation of the Commonwealth as a member of the Council of State Governments, both regionally and nationally, to arrange conferences and confer with officials of other states, other units of government and of the federal government in order to promote and assist in the development of interstate and federal-state relations.

In order to encourage and develop proposals for cooperation between the Commonwealth, other states and the federal government, five principal methods have been developed and are available. Each of the following methods have been employed to strengthen our interstate and federal-state relations: (1) the interstate compact; (2) reciprocal or concurrent legislation; (3) uniform or model legislation; (4) administrative agreement and (5) administrative cooperation.

Much of the work of this Commission is performed by standing committees which include the following:

Agriculture
Conservation
Crime
Health and Welfare
Highway and Motor Vehicles
Interstate Waters
a. Interstate Commission on the Delaware River Basin
b. Interstate Commission on the Ohio River Basin.
c. Interstate Commission on the Potomac River Basin.
Liquor
Taxation
Traffic Safety
Uniform Laws.

The best government is that which is (1) efficient and effective and (2) controlled by those it governs. To meet the first requisite the state governments must be cooperative and coordinate their activities among themselves and with the federal government. To meet the second requisite, the government must be responsible to the electorate. In order to achieve these two basic essentials and to establish the proper climate, commissions on interstate cooperation, or similar agencies. were created in each of the forty-eight states.

RELATION OF THE COMMISSION TO THE COUNCIL OF STATE GOVERNMENTS

The Pennsylvania Commission on Interstate Cooperation is affiliated with the Council of State Governments with headquarters in Chicago, a Washington office which is used to inform the states of the activities of the Federal government and regional offices in New York City and San Francisco.

The Council of State Governments is a joint agency established by the states, supported by the states for service to the states. It acts as a medium for improving legislative, administrative and judicial practices in the states; an agency for securing full cooperation among the states in solving interstate problems both regional and national; a means of facilitating and improving federal-state relations. The Council exists to serve governmental progress within the individual states, among the states working together and by the states in their relations with the Federal government.

The Council is composed of state commissions on interstate cooperation or similar agencies setablished in all forty-eight states as official entities of the state governments and operates through regional continuing committees. The states themselves govern and control the Council. Its policy is determined by a Board of Managers comprising forty-eight delegates members representing the forty-eight states, nineteen ex officio members and ten managers at large. Each state selects its own delegate member and national and inter-state programs and policies are discussed and recommendations made at the two principal national conferences—the Board of Managers Meeting and the General Assembly of the States.

It appears most timely and appropriate to remark that Representative Norman Wood, Chairman of the Pennsylvania Commission, Second Vice-President and Pennsylvania's delegate to the Board of Managers, has actively and effectively participated in all phases of the Commission's activities. Other Pennsylvanians who have served on national associations of the Council include Governor John S. Fine as a member of the Executive Committee of the Governors' Conference, Harrington Adams and S. Edward Hannestad as members of the Drafting Committee of State Officials, Gene Smith as Treasurer of the National Association of Secretaries of State, Baker Royer as a member of the Executive Committee of the National Association of Legislative Service Agencies and F. Carl Anderson as a member of the Executive Committee of State Purchasing Officials.

The Council is the secretariat for America's 7,500 legislators organized through the American Legislators Association, the Governors' Conference, the National Association of Attorneys General, the National Association of Secretaries of State, the National Association of State Budget Officers, the Parole and Probation Compact Administrators Association, the National Association of State Purchasing Officials, the Conference of Chief Justices, the National Association of Legislative Service Agencies, the Drafting Committee of State Officials and Special Council Committees. Similar service is rendered to any regional organization of these groups or other activities that are considered to be of mutual interest to more than one state in a geographical area. The Council has a cooperative working agreement with the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws. The Council also cooperates with many other organizations whenever their programs involve service to state government.

Most of the work of every state government is quite naturally concentrated on its internal affiairs but most of the problems encountered have their counterparts in other states. The Council, therefore, arranges conferences, issues publications and otherwise arranges for the exchange of information so that the experience of all of the states can be shared.

The Council undertakes and publishes special studies in the fields of public education, mental health, motor vehicles, legislative processes and procedures, state judicial systems, state governmental reorganization, state-local relations, public authorities in the states and finance. Regular recurring publications of the Council include the Book of the States, 1954-55, a standard biennial reference work on state affairs; State Government, a monthly magazine of state affairs; Washington Legislative Bulletin, a monthly news bulletin of congressional and administrative action of interest to the states and Suggested State Legislation, an annual publication containing proposals approved by the Drafting Committee of the Council.

Some of the more important work publications of the Council of State Governments are the Mental Health Programs of the Forty-eight States, 1950; the Mental Health Programs of the Forty-eight States—Summary and Recommendations; Interim Report—State Research and Training Programs in the Field of Mental Health, 1952; Training and Research in the State Mental Health Programs, 1953; Work Progress in the States in the Field of Mental Health; 1954; What Progress Against Mental Health?—Summary Reports, 1954; the Forty-eight State School Systems, 1949; Western Regional Cooperation in Higher Education, 1951; Higher Education in the Forty-eight States, 1952; Higher Education in the Forty-eight States—Summary and Conclusions; Public Authorities in the States, 1953; State-Local Relations; Federal Grants-in-Aid, 1949; the Interstate Compact since 1925, 1951; Trends in State Finance, 1952; Sources of State Tax Revenue; State Court Systems, 1953; Summaries of State Laws, Relating to the Treatment of Drug Addiction; State Regulation of Lobbying; Administrative Reorganization of State Governments; American Legislatures: Structures and Procedures, 1954; Occupational Licensing Legislation in the States; Sales of Alcoholic Beverages to Minors, 1952; Trade Barriers Affecting Interstate Commerce in Alcoholic Beverages, 1952; Impact on Alcoholic Beverage Control of Taxation and Markup, 1953 and Constitutional and Statutory Provisions of the States, 1953. In addition to the above, the Council handles a large volume of individual requests for information and research from state officials and private organizations and citizens.

A schematic diagram of the Council of State Governments and the Pennsylvania Commission on Interstate Cooperation follows to indicate graphically the relationship between these two and other related groups.

ACTIVITIES OF PENNSYLVANIA COMMISSION ON INTERSTATE COOPERATION

The Pennsylvania Commission on Interstate Cooperation is the agency which deals with interstate problems, mainly by its contact and work with the Council of State Governments. It serves as a channel for reports from the national organization to the General Assembly and the Governor.

The Governor and other state officials have attended national meetings pertaining to their official positions.

The Commission was represented at the Biennial General Assembly of the States, Annual Legislative Conferences and at various meetings dealing with Migrant Farm Labor, Mental Health, Great Lakes Seaway and Uniform Support.

During the biennium the Commission held four regular meetings and several special sessions.

Meeting of January 7, 1953

The Annual Meeting was held in the Commission office at Harrisburg.

Mrs. Eleanor Evans, Secretary of the Department of Public Assistance was called upon and reported that the Uniform Support Laws were working well but needed some clarifying amendments which the Commission approved.

Jay C. Gilford of the Wild Life Conservation Bureau of the Game Commission reported that they were working on a uiform non-resident license fee but had not yet reached a solution to the problem. He stated the department is also interested in a law requiring a license for transporting foxes from one state to another.

Horace B. Rowland, Chief of the Division of Protection, Department of Forests and Waters spoke about the Forest Fire Protection Compact.

The Out-of-State Banking Act was discussed and the Commission favored either a clarifying amendment to existing law or separate legislation, authorizing banking corporations to service loans on properties in another state and protecting the bank in case of default.

Horace Segelbaum, Counsel for the Liquor Control Board explained legislation to eliminate trade barriers between the states. The Commission concluded that it is difficult to arrive at a satisfactory solution which would provide uniformity of fees as New York is an "open state," while Pennsylvania is a "monopoly."

Miles Horst, Secretary of Agriculture discussed the proposal to abolish the law requiring all food containers, such as ice cream boxes, to have a code number of the plant where they were used. The Commission decided that the law is protection to the consumer public and opposed any change.

Sergeant Cahalan of the State Police explained the uniform bus inspection standards and the proposed act requiring certain handling storage and transportation of flammable and explosive materials.

The Executive Director of the State Planning Board, F. A. Pitkin reported on Incodel, giving its background and progress to date. The Commission decided to introduce a bill on the subject.

Otto Messner, Secretary of Revenue spoke about the "highway use tax."

Harrington Adams, Deputy Attorney General explained the purpose of the Civil Defense Interstate Compact and its provisions.

Mr. B. E. Crihfield, Eastern Representative of the Council of State Governments reviewed Suggested State Legislation for 1953.

Meeting of June 3, 1954

The meeting was held at the Warwick Hotel, Philadelphia, in connection with the Regional Meeting on Professional Licensing.

The new committee members were appointed.

A request was made for suggestions of subjects for discussion at the Legislative Service Conference to be held at San Francisco, California, September 8-11, 1954. It was decided to pass along the suggestion that reform in legislative procedure would be an appropriate subject.

It was reported that the Chairman had ascertained by letter that most states would agree to an interchange of information on Unemployment Records. Alabama is prohibited by law from furnishing such information to other states.

Discussions took place on the management, control and supervision of the waters of the Great Lakes; Gypsy Moth Control, Migratory Farm Labor and on the proposed amendments to the Social Security Law.

It was decided to hold the National Meeting on Uniform Support at Pittsburgh, with Pennsylvania as host.

Meeting of September 20, 1954

The meeting was held in the Commission Office at Harrisburg.

Representative Albert Johnson reported on the Great Lakes States Seaway and Water Resources Conference which he attended in Chicago on August 26 and 27. It was pointed out that if Pennsylvania entered into the compact, we would want to get every advantage for the Port of Erie, our only port. The Chairman appointed the following subcommittee to help draft the compact:

Representative Albert Johnson
Senator John H. Dent
Honorable Charles Barber
Deputy Attorney General Harrington Adams

If the eight states and the Province of Ontario join the compact, Pennsylvania would pay one-ninth of the cost of operation of the compact.

Representative Charles Smith reported that the Legislative Service Conference held in San Francisco was a success and that Pennsylvania benefited a great deal by sending representatives. Mr. Smith presided at the Conference on Legislators and it was considered one of the best meetings.

Pennsylvania extended an invitation to the Legislative Service Conference to hold its meeting next year in Pennsylvania.

Meeting of November 9, 1954

The meeting was held in the Commission Office at Harrisburg.

Reports were received from several members who attended the National Conference on Uniform Support held at Pittsburgh on November 4-5, 1954. The meeting was well attended and was considered very successful.

The Commission agreed to back the increase from $30,000 to $37,500, in Pennsylvania's share of the cost of operating the Council of State Governments.

The Interpleader Compact was discussed and referred to the Committee on Unform Laws for study.

INCODEL

Interstate Commission on the Delaware River Basin

INCODEL is the contracted name for the "Interstate Commission on the Delaware River Basin."

INCODEL was established as a governmental agency of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and the States of New Jersey, New York and Delaware in 1937 by joint action of the Commissions on Interstate Cooperation in the Basin.

INCODEL's major function is to formulate programs for its four supporting state governments for the effective development, utilization and conservation of the waters of the Delaware River Basin, an interstate watershed of approximately 13,000 square miles with a population (1950 Census) of about 5,000,000 persons. Approximately 50 per cent of the total area and the total population is within Pennsylvania.

INCODEL is essentially a planning and service agency. It has no administrative powers. All INCODEL programs are referred to its supporting state governments for approval, adoption and determination of procedures for their execution.

INCODEL has twenty members, five from each of its supporting states. Of each group of five, one is a State Senator; one, a member of the House of Representatives; one, a State official representing the Governor; one, a member or an official of a planning or administrative agency of the State; and one, a member-at-large. The first four members are appointed by the respective parent Commissions on Interstate Cooperation, of these the first three must be members of the Commission. The members-at-large are selected by INCODEL's sixteen state government officials.

INCODEL's initial objective was to develop a program for coping with the pollution of the Delaware River and its tributaries. Such a program was perfected after two years of intensive study. The program was subsequently embodied into reciprocal legislation and enacted into law by each of the four states. The four-state pollution abatement program is administered on a concurrent and cooperative basis by the health departments of the respective states. INCODEL is the coordinating agency.

INCODEL's basin-wide pollution abatement program, according to a nationwide survey made by the U. S. Public Health Service in 1954, has progressed further and faster than any comparable program in the entire country. By the end of 1955 virtually all major cources of pollution will be under reasonable control.

INCODEL, about 1940, began to extend its activities into other fields of natural resources development. It devised and gained the acceptance of the now widely acclaimed $35,000,000 U. S. Government-Commonwealth of Pennsylvania project for the restoration of the Schuylkill River, the Delaware's largest tributary. INCODEL has played a major role in many other accomplishments in the field of water resources development and the protection and enrichment of the soil, forests, fish and wildlife nad recreational potentialities of the Delaware River Valley.

INCODEL, in 1949, was directed by reciprocal legislation enacted by the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and the States of New Jersey and New York to make a special survey to determine the advisability of carrying out an integrated project for the mutual utilization of the waters of the Delaware River Basin by the authorizing States. Complying with a provision in the directives, INCODEL filed a report covering its recommendations with the Governors and Legislatures of its four supporting state governments on January 15, 1951.

INCODEL recommended that the three authorizing States and Delaware, if it desired, should enact a compact creating a Delaware River Basin Water Commission to construct and operate a water conservation program consisting of a series of four reservoirs in the upper reaches of the Delaware River Basin. Three of the reservoirs would have been located in New York State. The fourth reservoir would be on the main stem of the Delaware River between Pennsylvania and New Jersey near Wallpack Bend. Acts embodying the proposed compact were enacted by the Legislatures and signed by the Governors of New Jersey and Delaware in 1951 and by the Legislature and the Governor of New York in 1952.

INCODEL's plan hit a serious snag in February 1953 when a committee appointed by Governor Fine recommended the rejection of the INCODEL project by Pennsylvania claiming it was primarily for the benefit of New York and New Jersey. In place of the INCODEL plan Governor Fine's committee recommended that Pennsylvania should meet its water problems by the development of the Lehigh River and of tributaries of the Delaware River in Pennsylvania.

Despite the adverse recommendations of Governor Fine's committee, legislation incorporating a compact for Pennsylvania's participation in the INCODEL plan was passed by the House of Representatives in 1953 under the sponsorship of Representatives Hiram G. Andrews and Norman Wood. However, the Chairman of the Committee of the Senate to which the Bill (House Bill 1295) was referred refused to report the Bill out for a vote on the Senate floor.

When it became apparent that the INCODEL plan was doomed in Pennsylvania the City and State of New York filed a petition with the Supreme Court of the United States asking for permission to proceed unilaterally with the construction of a reservoir on the West Branch of the Delaware River near Cannonsville, New York, for the purpose of securing an additional supply of 360 million gallons of water a day for the City of New York.

Pennsylvania and New Jersey immediately filed Answers in opposition to the New York proposal. However, in June 1953, the Attorneys General of the three litigant States announced that an agreement had been reached for the settlement of the controversy. This agreement was embodied in an Order issued by the Supreme Court on June 7, 1954. Regrettably, neither INCODEL nor the Pennsylvania Commission was consulted in the formulation of this agreement.

The agreement granted the New York petition on the condition that the City maintain certain guaranteed minimum dry weather flows in the Delaware River at Montague, New Jersey, where it leaves New York State. The agreement also granted New Jersey the right to divert 100 million gallons of water a day from the Delaware River without compensating releases. It also provided that Pennsylvania would be granted the right to build a storage dam and reservoir across the Delaware River near Wallpack Bend and a diversion dam near Yardley provided that Pennsylvania by July 1, 1955 enact legislation accepting the terms of Chapter 443 of the New Jersey Laws of 1953. The New Jersey Law repeals a provision in the 1783 compact between Pennsylvania and New Jersey prohibiting the construction of dams across the Delaware River between the two States.

The Supreme Court appointed the Chief Hydraulic Engineer of the U. S. Geological Survey as "River Master" to administer the provisions of the Decree.

After the opening of the Delaware River controversy in the U. S. Supreme Court and the subsequent issue of the Court of Order of June 7, 1954, a new Chief Executive had either taken office or been elected to office in each of the States party to the suit except Delaware. Governor Robert B. Meyner of New Jersey was inaugurated in January, 1954. Hon. George M. Leader and Hon. Averell Harriman were elected as Governors of Pennsylvania and New York in November, 1954 to take office in January, 1955. And Hon. Robert F. Wagner became the Mayor of the City of New York in 1954.

Regardless of any new principles respecting the development of the water resources of the Delaware River Basin which may be evolved by the new administrations. the Pennsylvania Commission on Interstate Cooperation should continue its interest and support of the underlying objective of the INCODEL Plan for solving the water resources problems of the Delaware River Basin through the processes of intergovernmental cooperation.

NATIONAL INTERSTATE ACTIVITIES

The Board of Managers of the Council of State Governments

The 1953 annual meeting of the Board of Managers of the Council of State Governments was held at the Blackstone Hotel in Chicago, Illinois, on December 11 and 12. Pennsylvania's member on the board is Representative Norman Wood, who at the close of the meeting was elected 2nd Vice President for the following year.

The meeting was presided over by Governor Allan Shivers, of Texas, President of the Governor's Conference and President of the Council of State Governments. Executive Director Frank Bane made the annual report. The meeting proceeded to discuss the following topics: federal-state relations, mental health, interstate cooperation in public works, disaster relief, the organization and operation of state government, and the legislative program for 1954.

The Honorable John A. Hannah, Assistant Secretary of Defense was the speaker at the luncheon meeting.

The 1954 annual meeting was held at Edgewater Beach Hotel, Chicago, Illinois, on December 1, 1954, preceding the Biennial Assembly of the States. Governor Dan Thornton of Colorado was Chairman of the meeting and Frank Bane, Executive Director made his annual report. Subjects discussed included highways, water and other natural resources, mental health problems, education, problems of the aging, atomic energy, Intergovernmental Relations and new legislation for 1955.

Governor Robert F. Kennon of Louisiana was elected the new President.

The Twelfth Biennial General Assembly of the States

The Twelfth Biennial General Assembly of the States was held December 2, 3, 4, 1954, at the Edgewater Hotel, Chicago, Illinois. Governor Dan Thornton of Colorado, opened the meeting and presented his successor, Governor Robert Kennon of Louisiana.

The first half day discussion was on highway finances and construction. The report of the Governor's Conference to the President of the United States was discussed.

The afternoon panel discussion was on the problems of the aging of our country; among these were the problem of working after age 65, the increase in mental illness among the aged, redesigning public homes for the aged, medical care, and the like.

The following morning the subject was the state's responsibilities concerning water and water resources. The Great Lakes States Compact, the development of the Missouri Basin, water pollution in the Delaware River and the problems of the Columbia River Basin, were all topics covered in the discussion. The afternoon session was on taxation and fiscal problems of the states. The great demand for new and expanded services and the need for new revenue were emphasized.

The final session considered the problems of elementary and secondary education. It was especially concerned with the increasing number of new pupils and the increase in the cost of buildings, teachers and transportation.

James B. Conant, American High Commissioner in Germany, delivered the address at the state dinner. Paul G. Hoffman, Chairman of the Board of Studebaker-Packard Corporation, spoke at the luncheon meeting.

National Governors' Conference on Mental Health

A National Governors' Conference on Mental Health met at Detroit, Michigan on February 8-9, 1954. Governor G. Mennon Williams was the Chairman of the meeting. Practically all the states were represented and the meeting was very enlightening and profitable. It was suggested that there was a great need for research and training in the mental health field, with prevention of mental illness the primary need and great concern was expressed regarding the crowded conditions in state mental hospitals, and the need for substantial increases in appropriations in some states to support an adequate program.

The conference adopted the following 10-point program on mental health:

1. By far the major share of a state's mental health resources must be used for the care and treatment of patients in state hospitals for the mentally ill. Psychiatric treatment with the fullest use of existing knowledge can return many more people to productive and useful lives. Increased appropriations for additional qualified mental health personnel (including psychiatrists, psychologists, social workers, nurses and related personnel) and intensive treatment programs should be provided by the states at their next legislative sessions to increase the number of patients discharged from state mental hospitals.

2. Training and research in the field of mental health are essential elements of effective mental health programs. The serious accumulation of patients and costs can only be reduced by discovering new knowlledge and new methods of treatment and by more adequate training and developmnt of mental health personnel State legislatures are urged to appropriate specific sums for training and research in addition to the regular appropriations for care and treatment.

3. Ultimate reduction of the population in state mental hospitals can only be achieved by efforts to prevent mental illness. This requires facilities for early identication, for early treatment and for aftercare and supervision of those on leave from state hospitals. State governments should take the initiative with both financial and professional assistance in stimulating local public and private agencies to participate actively in preventive programs.

4. At present it is estimated that less than 1 per cent of total state mental health budgets is expended for research—4 million dollars out of a total expenditure of about 560 million dollars. Based on a comprehensive survey of state mental health officials, it is recommended that the states should devote a much larger percentage of their total mental health budgets to basic and applied research in the biological and behavioral sciences and to the training of personnel in research methods.

5. Effective training and research programs cannot be achieved without effective organization. A position of director of training and research should be established within the mental health agency in each state to assume responsibility for the coordination of mental health training and research within the state's jurisdiction. A technical advisory committee, composed of scientists and educators in the field of mental health, cooperating with scientists in universities and industry, should be established in each state to advise and assist the mental health agency and other state departments concerned with the coordination of training and research activities.

6. State institutions which are not accredited for residency or as affiliate training centers for psychiatrists, clinical psychologists, social workers, nurses and other professional groups should receive support from Governors and Legislatures in their endeavors to raise the level of teaching and supervision in their institutions to secure accreditation.

7. The states should provide stipends for graduate training in the psychiatric field, should adjust salary scales and should provide educational leaves of absence so that state mental hospitals may compete effectively for the limited personnel available to fill treatment, teaching and research positions.

8. One of the important obstacles to adequate evaluation of procedures and therapies is a lack of uniformity in statistical methods in mental hospitals and clinics throughout the Country. All states should cooperate with the United States Public Health Service and the American Psychiatric Association in the adoption of uniform terminology for statistical reporting procedures in the field of mental health.

9. Joint action by groups of states may provide one of the most fruitful means of attacking mental illness. This can be partially achieved by perodic regional mental health conferences, regional programs such as that now sponsored by the Southern Regional Education Board, and by active participation in the Interstate Clearinghouse now established through the Council of State Governments by request of the Governor's Conference. The clearinghouse, in cooperation with existing public and private agencies, will provide a medium for exchange of pertinent information among the states, will assist the states in organizing more effective mental health programs, and will help in developing interstate agreements so that groups of states can utilize to the fullest extent existing training and research facilties.

10. State and community mental health organizations should play important roles in educating the public to the problems of mental health and to the methods of improving psychiatric services. The states should encourage and support mental health education in the schools, good relationships between hospitals and their surrounding communities, and the provision of adequate community psychiatric services. These may, in the long run, be most important in determining the mental health of the Nation.

National Association of Legislative Service Agencies

The National Association of Legislative Service Agencies was organized in 1948 as the "Legislative Service Conference." Its purpose is to develop a better and more effective service to legislative bodies.

The 1953 session was held in Baton Rogue, Louisiana and New Orleans, La., on September 28, 29 and 30 and October 1st. Representative Charles C. Smith was a member of the panel on state Legislatures.

The 1954 session was held in San Francisco and Sacramento, California on September 8-11. The meetings were instructive and brought forth some very good thought and new ideas. The panel on "budget" pointed out that a performance type budget was very satisfactory.

In addition to hearing an address by Governor Goodwin Knight of California, the members attending were escorted through the beautiful capitol building and shown the facilities of the various service agencies and offices which aid the California Legislature. The delegation was welcomed by the Speaker of the House, James W. Silliman. Representative Charles C. Smith presided over the panel on Legislatures.

EASTERN REGIONAL CONFERENCE

Since the establishment of the Council of State Governments, it has been the practice to hold a General Assembly of that body every two years, on the eve of the approaching legislative sessions of most states.

In 1953 it was decided to join with the Regional Office of the Council of State Governments in calling an Eastern Regional Conference of the Northeastern States in the off years between General Assemblies. This regional meeting serves to integrate further the growing activities of the Commission on Interstate Cooperation of the northeastern states and the interstate agencies operating in this region.

The Conference was held on December 17 and 18, 1953, in the Small Ballroom of the Roosevelt Hotel, New York City. It was attended by approximately one hundred thirty persons, representing ten northeastern states, interstate agencies and the federal government.

The meeting was in charge of Elisha T. Barrett, Chairman of the New York Commission on Interstate Cooperation. He welcomed the group on behalf of the sponsoring agencies and explained that the conference was in the nature of an experiment to bring together in "round up" fashion, a summary of the reports and recommendations during the last year.

Speakers included Frank Bane, Executive Director of the Chicago office. He reported that a major work of the Council for the next year will be in the field of Federal-State relations and the Council is committed to render every assistance to the Federal Commission on Intergovernmental Relations in the course of its studies.

Following a roll call of States, Chairman Barrett appointed the following persons as members of the Resolution Committee:

Representative Norman Wood, Pennsylvania, Chairman
Senator George Weeks, Maine
Representative Leonard B. Peever, New Hampshire
Senator Carleton Howe, Vermont
Hon. Wallace Kittredge, Massachusetts
Representative Earl Byrne, Rhode Island
Representative James Beatty, Connecticut
Representative Leo Noonan, New York
Representative Marie Maebert, New Jersey

The following subjects were discussed at length:
Reciprocal Support Laws
Adoption Laws
Unemployment Compensation
Intergovernmental Relations
Civil Defense
Water Resources
State and Federal Aid to Libraries
Banking Laws
Uniform Commercial Code
Interpleader
Migrant Labor
Interstate Liquor Problems.

REPORT OF THE SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON PROFESSIONAL LICENSING

New Jersey—New York—Pennsylvania

Early in 1954, the Pennsylvania Commission on Interstate Cooperation communicated with the Council of State Governments, pointing out that the Commission had discussed in some detail the matter of professional licensing by the States and the difficulties encountered by practitioners in pursuing their professions in States other than the one in which they are licensed. It was suggested that the Council of State Governments cooperate in arranging a regional meeting of all States contiguous to Pennsylvania to explore this subject in further detail. A preliminary review of the matter indicated that it would be more practicable to limit such a regional meeting to the States of New Jersey, New York and Pennsylvania, since they tend to license the same types of professions and since their Commissions on Interstate Cooperation have close and continuing regulations.

Accordingly, a regional meeting of the three States was held in Philadelphia on June 4, 1954, under the joint auspices of the Pennsylvania Commission on Interstate Cooperation and the Council of State Governments. Approximately 35 persons attended, including legislators, commissioners on interstate cooperation and licensing administrators. The conference reviewed general and specific problems of licensing, based on factual material which had been made available from questionnaires prepared for the Council of State Governments during its over-all study of the subject (see "Occupational Licensing Legislation in the States," Chicago, 1952, 106 pp.). While the conference recognized where the problems lay, it also recognized that further study by a smaller group was essential. For this reason, the conference took action to establish the present special committee and rules and regulations which will lead to effective interstate cooperation among the three States and which will serve to remove obstacles to the interchange of qualified license holders." The committee was directed to make its report to the respective States by not later than December 31, 1954. The committee membership is as follows:

New Jersey

Hon. Marie F. Maebert, Member of the General Assembly, Chairman
Hon. Mark Anton, Member of the Senate
Hon. Frederick G. Weber, Deputy Attorney General

New York

Hon. Leo P. Noonan, Member of the Assembly
Hon. Frank S. McCullough, Member of the Senate
Dr. Robert C. Killough, Jr., Asst. Commissioner for Professional Education

Pennsylvania

Hon. Hiram G. Andrews, Member of the House of Representatives
Hon. Montgomery F. Crowe, Member of the Senate
Dr. Dorr E. Crosley, Deputy Superintendent, Department of Public Instruction, Bureau of Professional Licensing

A meeting of the special committee was held in New York City on October 19, and tentative agreement was reached on the scope and emphasis of the report to be made by the committee. A subsequent meeting of the committee was held on December 15, 1954, at which time the present report was adopted for submission to the Commissions on Interstate Cooperation of New Jersey, New Nork and Pennsylvania.

General Findings and Recommendations

The committee has used three principal mechanisms in arriving at its conclusions. These are (1) preparation of a summary of licensing requirements, including basic licensing provisions, reciprocity or endorsement policies, and fee rates; (2) circulation of a questionnaire intended to elicit analytical information about existing problems and practices; and (3) across the table conference discussion of specific problems. It will be noted that the committee has concerned itself only with professions and occupations licensed in common by all three states.

After review, the committee determined that problems related to temporary or occasional practice in another state would not be treated in the present report. Matters of this nature, and possibly other aspects of professional licensing, will be treated in subsequent reports of the committee.

The committee is of the opinion that there is an important general recommendation to be made in the interest of providing flexibility in a number of the licensing statutes. Such action would help to alleviate interstate problems arising from strict intrepretation of existing licensing statutes. It is recommended that, where appropriate, the licensing laws of the three states be amended to include similar language.

THIRD ANNUAL INTERSTATE CONFERENCE ON RECIPROCAL SUPPORT LEGISLATION

The Third Annual Interstate Conference on Reciprocal Support Legislation was held at the Hotel William Penn, Pittsburgh, on Thursday and Friday, November 4-5, 1954. The conference was sponsored jointly by the Pennsylvania Commission on Interstate Cooperation and the Council of State Governments, and was attended by approximately seventy-five persons representing 24 states, territories and possessions. The Host Chairman was Representative Norman Wood, Chairman of the Pennsylvania Commission on Interstate Cooperation. The presiding officers included Attorney General J. Gerald Williams of Alaska; James J. Barry, State Welfare Commissioner of New Hampshire; Senator John H. Dent of Pennsylvania; Assistant Attorney General General Ernest Halstedt of Connecticut; and J. Luther Glass of the Virginia State Department of Welfare and Institutions.

The conference was called to order by Chairman Wood of Pennsylvania, who welcomed the delegates on behalf of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania. This was followed by a roll call of the states present and the adoption of conference rules. Subsequently the Chair named the following persons to serve on the resolutions committee:

Assemblyman Leo Noonan of New York, Chairman
Ernest Halstedt of Connecticut
Robert P. Wray of Pennsylvania
Horace Pepper of Louisiana
Attorney General J. Gerald Williams of Alaska
Arthur Iverson of Michigan
Philip Markley of Massachusetts
J. Luther Glass of Virginia
L. F. Serbia Cordova of Puerto Rico

Advisors to the committee were:

W. J. Brockelbank of the Uniform Law Commissioners
William Frederick of the Council of State Governments

The conference then considered and acted upon the individual items in the detailed agenda, and a summary of the action on the agenda is shown below. The members of the conference were guests of the Pennsylvania Commission on Interstate Cooperation at the Thursday Luncheon, and the Luncheon Speaker was Honorable Robert Woodside, Judge of the Pennsylvania Superior Court. Judge Woodside, whose background has included service in the Legislature, as Attorney General of Pennsylvania, and as a Uniform Law Commissioner, welcomed the Guests to Pennsylvania and expressed his belief in the importance of conferences like the National Conference on Reciprocal Support Laws. He pointed out that there was a danger of overlooking possible savings when state agencies had the tremendous budgets usually found in state welfare departments, and he emphasized the value of legislation such as the Uniform Reciprocal Support of Dependents Act which can reduce the need for large welfare expenditures for the support of abandoned families. Judge Woodside also said that the legislation was good since it attempted to solve the problem on the state and local level, instead of the federal level. He stressed the importance of "keeping government close to the people," and he said that interstate cooperation was essential if the states were to solve their problems instead of letting the federal government handle them. In closing, Judge Woodside pointed out there were some differences in the reciprocal support legislation enacted in the various states, and he suggested that there might be a need to make all statutes uniform.

Consideration of and action on the agenda continued through the Thursday afternoon and Friday sessions of the conference. As the final order of business on Friday afternoon, Assemblyman Noonan of New York, Chairman of the Resolutions Committee, presented the report of that committee and the conference adopted six resolutions. The conference thereupon adjourned.

RECORD OF LEGISLATION PROPOSED DURING THE 1953 SESSION

Middle Atlantic States Forest Fire Compact

This was enacted into law and Pennsylvania was the first State to adopt the Compact.

Reciprocal Banking Laws

This legislation was designed for transaction of business by out-of-State Banking Corporations and was primarily for reciprocity among New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania. This bill passed the House of Representatives but died in the Senate.

Water Resources of Delaware River (Incodel)

See Report on Incodel. Passed the House of Representatives but died in the Senate.

Delaware River Joint Toll Bridge Commission

This legislation enlarged the scope of work and the territory of the present Commission. Enacted into law.

Vesicular Exanthema

Prohibiting the feeding of untreated garbage to swine. Enacted into law.

Joint Legislative Budget and Finance Committee

Proposed a Joint Committee of both Houses to study the fiscal program of the Commonwealth and report at the next Session of the General Assembly. Passed both Houses but was vetoed by Governor Fine.

RESOLUTION

RESOLVED, that appropriate legislative action be taken to allow emergency vehicles using bridges under the jurisdiction of the Delaware Joint Authority, when travelling to and from designated localities in time of emergencies, be permitted the use without charge of toll, highways, bridges, tunnels and other facilities requiring a fee for their use, within the state and adjoining states, and be it further,

RESOLVED, all emergency vehicles shall be defined as those vehicles so declared through the state motor vehicle registration be termed as such or otherwise be so classified also by legislative action, and be it further

RESOLVED, this post may specify a few vehicles that shall be considered emergency vehicles as follows:

1 Ambulances
2 Fire Apparatus
3 Rescue Equipment (prime mover and trailer)
4 Police Cars as recognized by the state

REPORT OF THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS OF CITY TRUSTS TO THE LEGISLATURE OF THE COMMONWEALTH OF PENNSYLVANIA FOR 1953.

CITY OF PHILADELPHIA

BOARD OF DIRECTORS OF CITY TRUSTS
120 S. Third Street, Philadelphia 6, Pa.

W. Henry Gillam, Jr., General Manager
Blackwell Newhall, Assistant General Manager

August 3, 1954

To the Chief Clerk of the Pennsylvania House of Representatives, Harrisburg, Pennsylvania.

Dear Sir:

As specifically provided in Clause XXIV, Item 3, of the Will of the late Stephen Girard, the Board of Directors of City Trusts acting for the City of Philadelphia renders herewith to the Legislature of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, a detailed account for the year 1953 of the Estate devised to the City of Philadelphia, in trust, and the investment and application of the same, and a report in like manner of the state of Girard College, a duplicate copy of which has been rendered to the Senate of Pennsylvania.

Very respectfully yours,

W. H. GILLAM, JR.,
General Manager.

August 3, 1954

To the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

Gentlemen:

In accordance with Clause XXIV, Item 3, of the Will of Stephen Girard, the City of Philadelphia, acting by the Board of Directors of City Trusts, herewith submits a detailed account concerning the devised and bequeathed estate of Stephen Girard, deceased, with the investments and application of the same, together with a report of the state of Girard College, for the year 1953.

The principal of the Residuary Fund for the maintenance of Girard College amounted on December 31, 1953 to $70,164,983.55, exclusive of the value of real estate devised and still held, or $11,444.96 less than at the end of the year 1952.

The total ordinary expenditures for the support and maintenance of Girard College amounted to $2,023,313.64, or $41,471.28 less than for the year 1952. The average number of students maintained was 1,213, and the cost of maintenance per capita, $1,668.02, or $64.93 more than for the year 1952.

Total student enrollment, January 1, 1953 ...	1,264
Students admitted during the year	101	1,365
Indentures cancelled	164
Students leaving at eighteen years of age ...	18
Students enrolled but not admitted	2
Total student enrollment, December 31, 1953		1,180

The year 1953 at Girard College was one of stabilization following a period of rising costs and retrenchment. The only unanticipated expenditure was an item of maintenance, the replacement of the underground heating mains and domestic hot water lines leading to the Armory Building.

The schools of Girard College are operating at a high level, despite changes required by the economy program. Annual promotion is proving to have more advantages than disadvantages, and there is no longer necessary a complete realignment of schedules and personal relationships each February. The morale of both staff and students is good. The faculty has been reduced in size, but its real strength remains in a corps of able, experienced teachers. The intramural athletic program has widened its scope, and the Student Center, the social program, and other student activities are running well.

The Director of Secondary Education, the Director of Elementary Education, and the Head Dietician at the College resigned during the year to accept more advantageous positions outside Philadelphia. In the autumn the Vice-Prseident of the College, Dr. E. Newbold Cooper, assumed the responsibilities of the position of Director of Elementary Education which has been left unfilled. The Head of the Department of Mathematics, Mr. Karl R. Friedmann, was appointed Director of Secondary Education. Mr. George B. Diament, who had previously been connected with the Department of Physical Education and had served as Superintendent of the summer camp, was appointed Manager of the entire Food Service.

The receipts from the property of the Girard Estate Within the City of Philadelphia were as follows:

	Gross	Net
For the year 1953	$2,311,243.84	$909,999.55

The transactions for the year 1953 from the property of the Girard Estate Without the City of Philadelphia were as follows:

Gross receipts	$613,708.93
Taxes and other expenses	347,155.08	$266,553.85
Extraordinary expenditures		368,309.77
Excess of expenditures		$101,755.92

During the year 1953 the sum of $142,792.61 was set aside for possible permanent improvements and capital investments by colliery lessees.

The amount invested on December 31, 1953, in bonds, preferred and common stocks, and mortgages for the Residuary Fund totaled $62,899,843.19, or $857,054.98 more than in 1952, and the income therefrom amounted to $1,876,707.31.

The Fire Insurance Fund has assets amounting to $319,-055.86. The risks being carried amount to $908,803, of which $233,700 has been re-insured. The fund suffered losses amounting to $54.55 during the year 1953.

From the Fund for the Improvement of the Eastern Front of the City, the expense of lighting the district lying between Vine and South Streets, Front Street and the Delaware River, together with minor items incident thereto, has been paid in the amount of $11,042.16.

The shipment of coal from the Girard Estate during the year 1953 was 849,246.15 gross tons, a decrease as compared with 1952 761,768.25 gross tons, or 47.285%. The shipment was made up as follows:

	Tons
Shipped to market—Fresh mined	832,562.35
Bank coal	16,683.80
Total	849,246.15

The total shipment from the region for the year 1953 as reported by the Pennsylvania Department of Mines was 27,228,027 gross tons, a decrease of 8,579,338 gross tons, or 23.96% as compared with 35,807,365 gross tons for 1952. The Girard Estate's proportion of the regional shipments was 3.12% as compared with 4.50% in 1952.

The quantity of coal consumed in operating was 28,877 tons, 3.29% of the total production of 878,123.15 tons, a decrease of 5,895.50 tons, but an increase of 1.18% as compared with 2.11% in 1952. The substitution of electricity for steam continues to be the chief factor in the lessening consumption of boiler fuel. The average for the thirteen years from 1901 to 1913, when there were no collieries operated by electricity was 10.92%.

During the ninety-one years of active mining on the Girard Estate there have been marketed from it 140,232,430.90 tons.

The coal leases at the end of the year were thirteen in number, two less than at the end of 1952.

Under the provisions of Clause IV of the Will the sum of $800.52 was expended in the purchase of books, radios and a television set for schools in the first section of the first school district of Pennsylvania.

During the year 1953 the sum of $543.24 was expended in the purchase and distribution of fuel (coal) in accordance with the provisions of Clause V of the Will.

On behalf of the Board of Directors of City Trusts

JOHN DIEMARD,
President.

REPORT OF THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS OF CITY TRUSTS TO THE LEGISLATURE OF THE COMMONWEALTH OF PENNA.

FOR 1954

CITY OF PHILADELPHIA

BOARD OF DIRECTORS OF CITY TRUSTS

W. Henry Gillam, Jr.
General Manager
Blackwell Newhall
Assistant General Manager

120 S. Third Street
Philadelphia 6, Pa.

June 28, 1955

To the Chief Clerk of the Pennsylvania House of Representatives Harrisburg, Pennsylvania.

Dear Sir:

As specifically provided in Clause XXIV, Item 3, of the Will of the late Stephen Girard, the Board of Directors of City Trusts acting for the City of Philadelphia renders herewith to the Legislature of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, a detailed account for the year of 1954 of the Estate devised to the City of Philadelphia, in trust, and the investment and application of the same, and a report in like manner of the state of Girard College, a duplicate copy of which has been rendered to the Senate of Pennsylvania.

Very respectfully yours,

EMC.

W. H. GILLIAM,JR.
General Manager.

June 28, 1955

To the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

Gentlemen:

In accordance with Clause XXIV, Item 3, of the Will of Stephen Girard, the City of Philadelphia, acting by the Board of Directors of City Trusts, herewith submits a detailed account concerning the devised and bequeathed estate of Stephen Girard, deceased, with the investments and application of the same, together with a report of the state of Girard College, for the year 1954.

The principal of the Residuary Fund for the maintenance of Girard College amounted on December 31, 1954 to $70,563,478.83, exclusive of the value of real estate devised and still held, or $398,495.28 more than at the end of the year 1953.

The total ordinary expenditures for the support and maintenance of Girard College amounted to $2,144,312.82, or $120,999.18 more than for the year 1953. The average number of students maintained was 1,157 and the cost of maintenance per capita $1,853.34, or $185.32 more than for the year 1953.

Students admitted during the year	92	1,272
Indentures cancelled	105
Total student enrollment, December 31, 1954		1,140

The year 1954 saw a continued emphasis on the need for economy in all phases of the Girard College program. Student activities were further curtailed, though the academic offerings suffered little disturbance. The Alumni Fund made it possible to continue a number of enriching experiences which otherwise would have been dropped, among them being the Washington trip for Seniors and the expanded athletic and Boy Scout programs for younger boys. The Girard News and the Girard Magazine were also restored through the same source.

Allen Hall was altered so as to accommodate the entire Senior Class. A new apartment in Mariner Hall for the Senior Housemaster and his family and considerable electric rewiring in Lafayette Hall and the Infirmary were other physical improvements.

The academic program of Girard College continues to operate at a high level. Its satisfactory standards are nowhere better illustrated than by the excellent college grades made by the steadily greater number of Girard graduates who attend institutions of higher learning. Staff and student morale are good. The social program, the Student Center, extra- and intra-mural athletics, and the Student Councils are operating smoothly.

Dr. Merle M. Odgers resigned December 1, 1954, to become President of Bucknell University after eighteen years of outstanding service as President of Girard College. Justly merited tributes to his administration were given by the Board of Directors of City Trusts and the alumni, students, and faculty of the College. Dr. E. Newbold Cooper, Vice-President, assumed the duties and responsibilities of the presidency until the Board elected him President effective May 1, 1955. Mr. Karl R. Friedmann was elected Vice-President effective May 1, 1955. Two members of the Department of Physical Education, Mr. Alfred G. Otto, its head, and Mr. Benjamin F. Severy, were removed by death during the summer. Each had served well for over thirty-three years. Miss Carrie M. Frey of the French Department who had served twenty-five years also passed away on May 12, 1955. Mr. David C. Wolstenholme was appointed head of the Department of Physical Education to succeed Mr. Otto. Mr. John W. Leydon, head of the Foreign Language Department, retired after twenty-six years of devoted service. He was succeeded by Mr. John A. Lander, an alumnus of the College, who graduated in 1940. Mr. R. Foster Stevens, head of the Science Department and splendid faculty member for thirty-six years, also retired in 1954. He was succeeded by Dr. John M. Presson.

The receipts from the property of the Girard Estate Within the City of Philadelphia were as follows:

	Gross	Net
For the year 1954	$ 2,340,470.37	$ 931,478.83

(See details on page A-5)

The transactions for the year 1954 from the property of the Girard Estate Without the City of Philadelphia were as follows:

Gross receipts	$329,640.49
Taxes and other expenses	310,183.81	$ 19,456.68
Extraordinary expenditures		116,271.39
Excess of expenditures		$ 96,814.71

During the year 1954 the sum of $131,968.90 was set aside for possible permanent improvements and capital investments by colliery lessees.

The amount invested on December 31, 1954 in bonds, preferred and common stocks, and mortgages for the Residuary Fund totaled $64,033,408.16, or $1,133,564.97 more than in 1953, and the income therefrom amounted to $1,896,122.24.

The Fire Insurance Fund has assets amounting to $327,617.63. The risks being carried amount to $984,913, of which $208,700 has been re-insured. The fund suffered losses amounting to $37.36 during the year 1954.

From the Fund for the Improvement of the Eastern Front of the City, the expense of lighting the district lying between Vine and South Streets, Front Street and the Delaware River, together with minor items incident thereto, has been paid in the amount of $7,988.28.

The shipment of coal from the Girard Estate during the year 1954 was 762,994.75 gross tons, a decrease as compared with 1953 of 86,251.40 gross tons, or 10.15%. The shipment was made up as follows:

	Tons
Shipped to market—Fresh mined	694,155.00
Bank coal	68,839.75
Total	762,994.75

The total shipment from the region for the year 1954 as reported by the Pennsylvania Department of Mines was 23,760,992 gross tons, a decrease of 3,467,035 gross tons, or 12.73% as compared with 27,228,027 gross tons for 1953. The Girard Estate's proportion of the regional shipments was 3.21% as compared with 3.12% in 1953.

During the ninety-two years of active mining on the Girard Estate, there have been marketed from it 140,995,425.65 tons.

The coal leases at the end of the year were eleven in number, two less than at the end of 1953.

Under the provisions of Clause IV of the Will, the sum of $236.78 was expended in the purchase of books, microphones and phonographs for schools in the first section of the first school district of Pennsylvania.

During the year 1954 the sum of $185.20 was expended in the purchase and distribution of fuel (coal) in accordance with the provisions of Clause V of the Will.

On behalf of the Board of Directors of City Trusts

JOHN R. DIEMARD,
President.

STATE EMPLOYES' RETIREMENT BOARD
Harrisburg, Pennsylvania

Mr. William E. Habbyshaw
Chief Clerk
House of Representatives

My dear Mr. Habbyshaw:

In compliance with Section 4, subsection 9 of the State Employes' Retirement Act, Approved June 27, 1923, P. L. 858 and amendments thereto, I am transmitting a copy of the Financial Statement of the State Employes' Retirement Board.

Very truly yours,

GENE D. SMITH, Chairman
State Employes Retirement Board

COMMONWEALTH OF PENNSYLVANIA
DEPARTMENT OF STATE

HARRISBURG

October 27, 1953

His Excellency
John S. Fine, Governor
Commonwealth of Pennsylvania

FINANCIAL STATEMENT AS OF MAY 31, 1953

Dear Sir:

The following report is respectfully submitted in compliance with the act of June 27, 1923, P. L. 858, creating the State Employes' Retirement System and amendments thereto.

Section 4, subsection 9 provides:

> "The retirement board shall prepare and have published, annually, a financial statement showing the condition of the fund and the various accounts created by this act, and setting forth such other facts, recommendations and data as may be of use in the advancement of knowledge concerning State employes' pensions and annuities, and said retirement board shall submit said financial statement to the Governor of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, and shall file copies in the offices of the Secretary of the Commonwealth, of the State Insurance Department, and of the head of each department, for use of the State employes and the public."

Herewith please find the valuation balance sheet of the Retirement Fund as of May 31, 1953, with the accompanying comments. (Pages 4-7)

On May 31, 1953, the number of members of this System classed as contributors was 45,772 and the number of pensioners was 2,563, a total of 48,335.

The total assets of the fund amounted to $182,249,892.41 of which $119,190,753.41 was in investments and cash as follows:

Book value of bonds	$102,879,429.58
Book value of mortgage loan	15,800,000.00
Book value of stocks	100.00
Cash in banks	511,223.83

His Excellency, John S. Fine

The asset item of $3,393,956.36 is made up of two items, $2,950,067.16 and $443,889.20. The first item is the amount required to supplement the actual net earnings on the invested reserve funds in order to provide the credits at the regular interest rate of 4% on the account balances for the years ending May 31, 1951, 1952 and 1953. The second item is the amount required to bring the account balances up to the required reserves.

Interest accrued on investments amounts to $917,288.55 and members' contributions in transit amount to $551,-110.64.

The remaining asset item of $58,196,783.45 represents the present value of future contributions receivable from the Commonwealth and other contributing agencies.

As of May 31, 1953, the Member's Annuity Savings Account was $70,780,364.81. This is made up of members' contributions and interest credits thereon at the rate of 4% compounded annually. In addition, there is the Member's Annuity Reserve Account of $7,683,286.00. These are very significant items.

The following is a summary of the investments of the fund including the bonds at their par values and the corresponding percentages of the total holdings.

United States Treasury Bonds	$ 81,807,075.42	69.0%
Pennsylvania Municipal and County Bonds	4,009,500.00	3.4
New York Municipal Bonds	500,000.00	0.4
Pennsylvania Turnpike Bonds	5,500,000.00	4.6
State Public School Authority Bonds	11,030,000.00	.9.3
Pennsylvania State College 1st Mortgage	15,800,000.00	13.3
Stock	100.00	...
Total	$ 118,646,675.42	100.0%

The balance in the account representing the premiums paid on bonds purchased less the reserve for the amortization of such premiums is $32,854.16. This brings the above par values of the investments up to the total book value of $118,679,529.58.

The funds of the Retirement System have been invested in accordance with the Act of June 27, 1923, P. L. 858, Section 6, subsection 1: the Administrative Code, Article VII, Section 701, subsection F: and the Act of April 25, 1929, P. L. 723.

His Excellency, John S. Fine

The annuitants on the roll as of May 31, 1953 including the survivor beneficiaries and the amounts of their annuities were as follows:

	Nos.	Amounts of annuities
Superannuation	1,695	$ 2,051,924.46
Disability	313	204,144.83

Total	2,563	$ 2,634,955.12

In addition there were 6 beneficiaries receiving special benefits under the State Police Retirement System.

From Jun 1, 1952 to May 31, 1953, the Retirement Board:

(a) Certified 7,946 new members;

(b) Approved for payment $3,185,886.36 to 7,094 members who had terminated their employment with the Commonwealth and applied for the return of their contributions; and

(c) Approved 403 applications for retirement allowances.

In accordance with the Act under which the State Employes' Retirement System is being administered extensive studies of the mortality and service experience of the retirement system are made at the end of each five-year period. On the basis of such experience the rates of members' contributions, reserves and appropriation askings are determined.

The experience of the Retirement Fund as revealed by the fifth quinquennial evaluation for the period ending May 31, 1950 showed some further increases in the longevity of active members, as well as the pensioners and other annuitant lives. However, no change was required in the rates of members' contributions adopted for members entering the Retirement System on and after June 1, 1948, nor in the factors used in converting such members' accumulated deductions into members' annuities. Because of reductions in the rate of withdrawal from service and changes in the retirement rate, as well as some other changes in the experience which, however, are of minor effect, it has been necessary to adopt reserve factors in the case of the active members, who are the future annuitants, which on the whole require the maintenance of somewhat higher reserves.

JOINT STATE GOVERNMENT COMMISSION

of the

January 1955

The Joint State Government Commission was created by Act of 1937, July 1, P. L. 2460, as amended 1939, June 26, P. L. 1084; 1943, March 8, P. L. 13, as a continuing agency for the development of facts and recommendations on all phases of government for the use of the General Assembly.

LETTER OF TRANSMITTAL

To the Members of the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania:

There is submitted herewith the General Report of the Joint State Government Commission. The report presents summaries of the Commission's work for the 1955 Session.

The General Report is divided into four parts. Part I covers the studies undertaken in conjunction with the continuing study of the public schools of the Commonwealth directed by House Concurrent Resolution No. 79, Session of 1953. Part II deals with interim studies. In each case, where findings of fact eventuated in Commission recommendations, the proposed policies are outlined. Part III presents a listing of the membership of Joint State Government Commission, the subcommittees concerned with the various studies, the persons who served in the capacity of advisors, and the administrative and technical staff of the Commission. For the convenience of the members of the General Assembly, a complete listing of the areas which the Commission has studied in past biennia and the publications related to the studies is presented in Part IV.

Specific Commission recommendations are embodied in bills drafted by the Legislative Reference Bureau. These drafts will be submitted for the review, consideration, and action of the General Assembly.

On behalf of the Commission, the cooperation of the subcommittees, the advisors, and the Legislative Reference Bureau is gratefully acknowledged.

The Commission stands ready to render such service as the General Assembly and its standing committees may direct.

PART I

CONTINUING STUDY OF THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS

House Concurrent Resolution No. 78, Session of 1953, directs the Joint State Government Commission to "make a continuing study of the public schools of this Commonwealth" and to report the findings of its continuing study to the General Assembly from time to time.

Under this directive, the Commission, during the biennium 1953-55, focused its attention upon public school building subsidies, school health services, and school administration.

PUBLIC SCHOOL BUILDING SUBSIDIES

Investigation:

Ascertained the statutory provisions relating to Commonwealth subsidies on account of school buildings constructed by the State Public School Building Authority, municipality authorities, and other non-profit corporations. Investigated the financing of, and per-pupil construction costs of, all authority-financed school buildings.

Strategic Facts:

1. The Commonwealth has participated directly in capital-outlay expenditures of local school districts since 1949. Under the provisions of Act No. 557, Session of 1949 (P. L. 1879), rentals paid by a school district to the State Public School Building Authority were reimbursed in the amount of the annual rental multiplied by one-half the district's standard reimbursement fraction (without reference to the minimum value of the fraction used for current expense reimbursement).

In 1951, rental reimbursement was extended to school districts paying rentals to municipality authorities or other nonprofit corporations (1951, [January 21, 1952], P. L. 2195). By the same act, the calculation of the amount of the rental subsidy was changed as follows:

a. If the standard reimbursement fraction of the school district is equal to, or less than, .5999, the amount of the rental reimbursement is determined by multiplying the annual rental by one-half the standard reimbursement fraction.

b. If the standard reimbursement fraction of the school district is equal to, or greater than, .6000, the amount of the rental reimbursement is determined by multiplying the annual rental by the standard reimbursement fraction multiplied by itself.

Act No. 431, Session of 1953 (P. L. 1471), provides in part:

The Superintendent of Public Instruction shall not give his approval to any phase of any project or any project to be undertaken by the State Public School Building Authority or by any municipality authority or nonprofit corporation that would cause the approved reimbursable projects for such purposes to exceed four hundred and twenty-five million dollars ($425,000,000) in the aggregate for all the authorities combined for projects already undertaken and to be undertaken.

Prior to 1953, there was no statutory definition of the cost items upon which rental reimbursement was to be based. In general, reimbursement was based upon all expenditures relating to the school building, including cost of equipment. Act No. 431, Session of 1953, defined the cost items upon which rental reimbursement was to be based subsequent to the effective date of the act (August 26, 1953) as that portion of the annual rental charge "sufficient during the period of the lease to pay the cost of acquiring or constructing the school buildings, the cost of acquiring the land upon which the school buildings are situate, and the interest on such cost. . . ."

2. Approvals of reimbursable projects by the Department of Public Instruction reached the maximum of $425,000,000 in October, 1953. Of the aggregate amount of $425,000,000—whether for projects already constructed, under construction, or planned for construction—approximately $310,000,000 is attributable to municipality authority projects and $115,000,000 to projects of the State Public School Building Authority. As of November, 1954, the total estimated cost of projects submitted to the department for approval since the $425,000,000 limitation was reached amounted to approximately $120,000,000.

Reimbursable project construction cost is necessarily smaller than the amount on which the Commonwealth subsidy is paid, which is the total of approved construction costs plus interest costs. For example, assuming that money is worth 3 percent and that all projects are amortized over a period of 30 years, the total amount on which the Commonwealth would reimburse over time would be 1.53 times the project construction cost.

Under existing statutory provisions, the amount of Commonwealth reimbursement on account of an annual rental of a given amount will increase with increases in the equalization level. Under existing statutes, the equalization level, which was $4,500 for the school year 1953-54, will increase by $200 annually until it reaches $5,500 for the school year 1958-59 and thereafter.

Construction cost data for buildings constructed by authorities from 1949 to 1954 are available for 220 new elementary school buildings and 105 new secondary school buildings. To permit comparison of costs incurred at different points in time, the actual construction cost per pupil for each project was adjusted to a 1954 price basis.

a. Elementary schools.—On the basis of 1954 prices, construction cost per pupil for the authority-financed elementary buildings ranged from $474 to $2,166. The most frequently occuring value was about $1,000.

b. Secondary schools.—On the basis of 1954 prices, construction cost per pupil for secondary buildings constructed by authorities ranged from $750 to $4,300. The most frequently occurring value was about $1,550.

3. The Commonwealth currently pays approximately $4,000,000 biennially on account of closed schools (some of which have been closed since 1911). Under present statutes, this amount will increase with each succeeding biennium.

Recommendations:

1. It is recommended that, in calculating the amount of reimbursement on account of school building rentals, reimbursement for construction cost be based upon a legislatively specified cost standard or upon actual cost, whichever is smaller. The standards should be defined in terms of cost per pupil—that is, total construction cost divided by the rated pupil capacity of the building. The following standards are recommended:

a. For new elementary schools—$1,100 per pupil.

b. For new secondary schools—$1,700 per pupil.

c. For new combined elementary-secondary schools—a weighted average of the elementary and secondary standards, the weights being the rated elementary capacity and the rated secondary capacity of the combined building.

d. For additions or alterations to existing buildings, the standards listed above should be employed and the actual cost per pupil for comparison with the standard cost per pupil calculated as follows: Sum the insurance or appraisal value of the existing building, exclusive of the value of equipment, and the construction cost of the addition or alteration, and divide such sum by the rated pupil capacity of the altered or expanded school plant.

2. It is recommended that reimbursement for all the annual rentals of a particular project be calculated on the basis of a constant equalization level. Reimbursement on account of those projects for which a rental was paid to an authority during 1954-55 should be calculated on the basis of an equalization level of $4,500. For projects for which the initial rental is paid subsequent to the school year 1954-55, the amount of rental reimbursement should be calculated on the basis of the equalization level applicable during the year in which the general construction contract is awarded, or $4,500, whichever is greater.

3. It is recommended that the existing rental reimbursement formula be revised with a view to:

a. Removing the discontinuity at a standard reimbursement fraction of .6.

b. Reducing the rental reimbursement percentage somewhat for those districts with a standard reimbursement fraction less than .5.

4. It is recommended that the Commonwealth inspect projects of local school building authorities during construction.

[See Separate Report: Public School Building Subsidies]

SCHOOL HEALTH SERVICES

Investigation:

Reviewed health services provided by the Commonwealth to children of school age. Ascertained the statutory basis of the school health program. Investigated the operation of the various phases of the school health program. Conferred with a panel of medical specialists appointed by the Commission concerning medical practices and procedures calculated to improve the health level of children of school age.

Strategic Facts and Findings:

1. The Commonwealth makes available a variety of child health services that include both diagnosis of ailments and their treatment. The most costly health program for children in the Commonwealth is the school health program, administered by the state departments of Health, Public Instruction, and Public Assistance and local school districts. Under the program, biennial medical and dental examinations are made available to all pupils in public and private schools as well as to the employes of these institutions.

2. Load and cost of the school health program, school year 1952-53:

a. Medical examinations were given to 959,336 pupils enrolled in public and private schools.

b. Dental examinations were given to 922,984 pupils.

c. Commonwealth expenditures by category were as follows:

Department of Health
Medical examinations	$1,473,000
Dental examinations	629,500
School nursing service	2,034,500
State nurses	140,000
Laboratory, clerical, etc.	238,800
	$4,515,800
Department of Public Assistance
School medical assistance program	$ 95,000

d. Local school district costs in connection with the services enumerated amounted to approximately $3,000,000.

3. With respect to the effectiveness of the present school health program, the following shortcomings stand out:

a. The present program places undue emphasis on periodic, regularly scheduled medical examinations. The examinations do not provide an adequate or economic health inventory because:

(1). The periodicity of examination is too rigidly prescribed to take into account variations in health needs among children.

(2). Searching for defects of low correction value consumes a disproportionate fraction of the examination time.

(3). No use is made of such significant information as that provided by an appropriate medical history, attendance records, and records of development and scholastic achievement.

(4). Examination procedure does not permit the most economic division of labor among physicians, nurses, and technicians.

b. The program places undue emphasis upon diagnosis, and the level of corrections is low, partially due to inadequate follow-up.

c. The program calls for biennial dental examinations, though it is known that approximately nine out of every ten pupils have dental defects. Hence, the program involves the expenditure of funds to re-establish a known fact. Any educational purpose the dental examination program may serve could be achieved in a less costly manner.

4. The reporting system for the school health program lacks uniformity and internal consistency and fails to provide data necessary for computation of significant correction rates by defects. Such rates are essential to a thorough evaluation of the program.

5. The provisions of the School Code relating to biennial medical and dental examinations (Article XIV, Sections 1401 to 1413, inclusive) and other provisions of the code relating to health (Sections 1421 to 1438, inclusive) have resulted in a school health program which is neither functionally nor administratively integrated. For example, the biennial medical and dental examinations are given under the supervision of the Department of Health, but the sight and hearing tests are under the administrative jurisdiction of the Department of Public Instruction.

Section 1422 of the School Code provides: "Medical examiners of the several school districts shall make sight and hearing tests of the pupils . . . at least once each school year. [Emphasis supplied.] Such tests for hearing shall be made with audiometers approved and provided by the Department of Public Instruction. The Department of Public Instruction shall prescribe to . . . medical examiners . . . suitable rules of instructions as to the tests and examinations to be made . . ."

The evidence indicates that neither sight nor hearing tests are given with the frequency prescribed by law.

Recommendation:

It is recommended that the Commonwealth establish an integrated school health program under the administrative supervision of the Secretary of Health, with adequate supervisory personnel at the local level.

1. With respect to pupils, the health program should provide for a continuing health inventory of every school child.

Scheduled Health Appraisal.—A complete appraisal of the child's health should be made at three times—upon his entry into the school system and at about the time he attains age eleven and age fifteen. These scheduled health appraisals should be based upon information derived from:

a. An appropriate health questionnaire

b. A thorough physical examination

c. Specified tests and measurements

d. Attendance and achievement records.

Tests and Measurements.—The following tests and measurements should be given each child at the stated intervals:

a. A vision test, given annually by a nurse, technician, or teacher

b. A hearing test, employing an audiometer, given at least once every two years by a nurse, technician, or teacher

c. Measurement of height and weight at least once annually by either a nurse or a teacher

d. A chest X-ray, given by a medical technician, at approximately age fourteen.

The results of these tests and measurements should be available to the examining physician at the time of the scheduled physical examination.

Interim Health Appraisal.—Provision should be made for interim health appraisal in the periods between regularly scheduled health appraisals, consisting of the above enumerated tests and measurements; nurse or teacher observation of the child's physical and mental condition, attendance, and achievement records; and, when warranted, special physical examination and associated laboratory tests, which may be authorized by the nurse or physician.

Dental Examination.—A dental examination should be given to the child upon entrance into the school system, provided he has not had a dental inspection within the previous four months.

Private Examinations.—Any medical or dental examination, given by a licensed practitioner, made within a period of four month prior to the date of the regularly offered school examination, reported on authorized forms, and paid for at private expense, should be admissible in place of the school examination.

Parental Responsibility.—Parents should be urged to be present at the physical examinations and encouraged to inform school authorities within a reasonable period of time as to the steps, if any, taken to correct any defect found in the course of the medical examination.

2. With respect to school personnel, the health program should provide for:

a. A comprehensive pre-employment examination.

b. Biennial chest X-rays provided by the school district.

3. With respect to health personnel:

a. It should be made mandatory upon all school districts to employ—singly or jointly with other districts—school nurses.

b. Medical examiners should be compensated on the basis of time spent in performing health duties.

c. Medical examiners should be relieved of their duties with regard to sanitary inspection, which should be performed by qualified sanitarians.

4. With respect to financing:

a. The current arrangement between the Commonwealth and school districts for financing nursing service should be retained.

b. Commonwealth reimbursement with respect to costs incurred in furnishing other services under the program should be made available to local districts on a per-pupil (in average daily membership) basis.

5. With respect to records and forms: To facilitate constant re-evaluation of the entire health program, all records and forms should provide for:

a. Clearly defined, unambiguous terms.

b. A consistent defect classification on all forms used.

c. A defect classification which segregates defects according to degree of severity.

d. Paired defects and corrections for identical groups and specified time periods.

e. A means of distinguishing between.

(1) Newly discovered defects and those present in a prior examination.

(2) Corrections which follow treatment and those which occur without treatment.

f. A means of recording noncorrections due to removal of the child from the school system and disagreement between family physician and school physician.

[SEE SEPARATE REPORT: School Health Services]

SCHOOL ADMINISTRATION

Investigation:

Reviewed the statutory provisions relating to administration of the public schools of the Commonwealth. Reviewed proposals for reorganization of school administration on the county level. Conferred with representatives of the Department of Public Instruction, the Pennsylvania

State School Directors' Association, the Pennsylvania State Education Association, and organizations of school administrators regarding the adequacy of, and proposals for modifying, the existing administrative organization.

Strategic Facts:

1. The public schools of the Commonwealth are administered by local school boards, the county superintendents' offices, and the State Department of Public Instruction. All fourth class school districts are under the county superintendent, with immediate supervision by a supervising principal. A third class district may elect to choose a district superintendent or may remain under the county superintendent with immediate supervision by an associate superintendent or supervising principal. Under the law, all first and second class districts are administered by district superintendents.

The number of assistant county superintendents in any county office is determined by the number of teachers in districts operating under the county superintendent. County superintendents and members of their professional staffs, as well as district superintendents and associate and assistant district superintendents, are appointive officers who serve for specified terms; supervising principals are subject to the tenure provisions of the School Code.

The School Code specifies the minimum salaries of county superintendents and assistant county superintendents to be paid by the Commonwealth, but local boards may increase these salaries out of their own resources.

2. It would appear that with the rapid development of jointures which has taken place since 1945, many of the functions previously performed by the county superintendent are now performed by district superintendents, associate superintendents, and supervising principals. During the school year 1953-54, 63 percent of the school districts of the state were members of jointures; in some counties, practically all third and fourth class districts are members of joint organizations. However, in seven counties less than 30 percent of the third and fourth class districts are in jointures.

3. The present method of Commonwealth reimbursement for current expenses sometimes discourages the formation of jointures. If a district operates as a member of a jointure, it is reimbursed on the basis of the legislatively stipulated equalization level or maximum subsidy plus the supplementary payment on account of joint membership. For the school year 1952-53, reimbursement on account of elementary pupils attending a district's joint schools amounted to $160 per pupil times the district's standard reimbursement fraction. The comparable amount for secondary pupils was $218 times the districts's standard reimbursement fraction. If, however, a district sends its pupils to the schools of another ristrict or to a jointure of which it is not a member, it is reimbursed for the tuition cost incurred to the extent of 85 percent of the actual current expense cost of educating the pupils multiplied by the sending district's standard reimbursement fraction. If 85 percent of the actual tuition cost (exclusive of capital charges) exceeds the maximum subsidy plus supplemental payment per pupil, a district receives a larger Commonwealth reimbursement by sending its pupils to another district or jointure than it would receive if it were a member of a jointure. And, if total costs (current expense plus net capital expense) were the same under the two alternatives or greater under joint operation, the district's net financial position would be worse as a member of a jointure. For 1952-53, a tuition cost (exclusive of capital charges) in excess of $188 per elementary pupil and $256 per secondary pupil made membership in a jointure (on the assumption of equal costs) financially disadvantageous.

In 1952-53, 90 school districts sent all their elementary pupils to other districts' schools; 548 districts, or 22 percent of the school districts in the Commonwealth, sent all their secondary pupils to schools in other districts. The distribution of the 548 districts and their secondary pupils by the tuition cost (exclusive of capital charges) which prevailed in 1952-53 is shown in the table below.

Examniation of the table shows that for 184 districts tuition cost per pupil exceeded $250—the approximate cost level above which joint secondary operation was likely to be financially disadvantageous in 1952-53. Needless to say, the relative financial advantage consequent upon alternative operational arrangements varies with changes in both costs and equalization level. However, it appears that, even with the increase in the maximum subsidy provided by statute, districts with relatively high tuition costs would not find it financially advantageous to become members of joint organizations.

4. As heretofore pointed out by the Commission, the records of the public schools of the Commonwealth do not produce significant program cost data. (See Per-Pupil Cost of Vocational and General Education Programs in the Public Schools, A Report of the Joint State Government Commission to the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania [February, 1949].) Hence, the costs associated with alternative administrative organizations are not ascertainable.

Tuition Cost per Secondary Pupil	Number of Districts	Number of Secondary Pupils
(1)	(2)	(3)
$150-$174	8	434
175- 199	82	4,564
200- 224	122	7,516
225- 249	152	11,555
250- 274	91	8,851
275- 299	51	3,381
300- 324	25	2,133
325- 349	7	453
350- 374	4	460
375- 399	4	189
400- 450	2	195
Total	548	39,731

Recommendations:

It is recommended that:

1. The administrative structure of the public schools of the Commonwealth be limited to three levels: the local level, either the county or regional level, and the state level.

2. With the approval of the State Council of Education, the county superintendent be authorized to reorganize the county office with respect to personnel so that essential educational and supervisory services will be furnished and the nonessential eliminated.

3. Tuition reimbursement be modified in order to remove the financial advantage which induces districts to prefer sending their pupils to schools operated by other districts to membership in a jointure.

4. The Department of Public Instruction prescribe records and forms calculated to produce adequate program cost data, including capital charges.

PART II

INTERIM STUDIES

Nine interim studies were undertaken by the Joint State Government Commission. Of these, eight were directed by House Concurrent Resolution No. 79, July 23, 1953, adopted and agreed to July 27, 1953; the ninth, Decedents' Estates Laws, was initiated by the Commission under authority granted by the Act of 1937, July 1, P. L. 2460, as amended 1939, June 26, P. L. 1084.

FEASIBILITY OF ESTABLISHING A MEDICAL SCHOOL EXCLUSIVELY FOR THE TRAINING OF RESIDENTS OF THE COMMONWEALTH

Legislative Mandate:

To study and investigate the feasibility of establishing a medical school exclusively for the training of residents of the Commonwealth.

Investigation:

Reviewed the nature and extent of existing training facilities for physicians in Pennsylvania and the costs and methods of financing these facilities. Ascertained: relationship between population and number of physicians in Pennsylvania and other states; geographic distribution of physicians in Pennsylvania; interstate migration of medical school graduates; tuition costs, admission requirements, applications, and enrollments in medical schools in Pennsylvania and other states; and state of residence at time of matriculation of students in Pennsylvania medical schools. Determined if establishment of an additional medical school in Pennsylvania could be expected to increase the number of physicians in the state..

Strategic Facts:

1. Among the factors influencing the number of physicians practicing in a given state are degree of urbanization, extent of hospital facilities, per-capita income, and extent of training facilities. While the relative importance of the various factors has not as yet been established, available evidence strongly suggests that the extent of training facilities is not the governing factor. For example, in 1949, Pennsylvania, with six medical schools, and New Jersey, with no training facilities, had the same number of physicians per 100,000 population.

2. The interstate migration of medical school graduates is of considerable magnitude. For example, as of 1949, 47 per cent of the 18,647 active graduates of Pennsylvania medical schools were practicing outside of Pennsylvania. However, 2,447 physicians trained outside of Pennsylvania were practicing within the Commonwealth, resulting in a net export of 6,393 physicians, or 34 percent of the active Pennsylvania-trained physicians. Of the 1940 graduates of Pennsylvania medical schools, 28 percent of those who were residents of Pennsylvania, as compared with 85 percent of those who were residents of other states at the time of matriculation, were practicing outside of Pennsylvania in 1950.

3. Of the 685 applicants admitted to Pennsylvania medical schools in 1953, 469, or 68 percent, were residents of Pennsylvania. On the basis of testimony of administrative officials of Pennsylvania medical schools, taken in conjunction with an evaluation of rejected applicants, it appears that the number of qualified Pennsylvanians who applied to Pennsylvania medical schools in 1953 and were rejected due to lact of facilifies was less than ten.

4. The evidence strongly suggests that it is not economical to construct medical-training facilities for an anticipated load of less than approximately 200 students, or an enrollment of about 50 per cent. This figure is at least five times the total number of qualified Pennsylvania applicants who were not accepted because of facility limitations at Pennsylvania medical schools in 1953. If the proposed new school exclusively for Pennsylvania residents operated with an annual admission quota of 50, more than 80 percent of the 50 would be students who otherwise would attend existing schools in Pennsylvania or in other states. The existing Pennsylvania schools, in order to continue operating at capacity, would have to admit a larger number of nonresident students. Judging from past experience, it is likely that only about 15 percent of such students would practice in Pennsylvania after graduation.

5. For the five Pennsylvania medical schools for which records were sufficiently extensive to develop cost figures, the average per-student cost (excluding the value of donated services) for all Pennsylvania students was $3,106 in 1953-54. For these same five institutions, the average Commonwealth subsidy per Pennsylvania student was $2,382.

Finding:

At this time, the establishment of a school of medicine exclusively for the training of Pennsylvania residents is not feasible.

Recommendations:

It is recommended that:

1. When additional facilities for medical education are required, such facilities be provided at existing medical schools.

2. Medical schools, as a condition to receiving Commonwealth aid, be required to (1) maintain their records in such fashion as to show, on a per-student basis, total training costs, expenses on current account, overhead costs, and value of donated services, and (2) submit to the appropirations committees of the General Assembly records showing total enrollment and enrollment of Pennsylvania residents.

3. Pennsylvania medical schools receiving Commonwealth aid establish differential tuition charges in favor of Pennsylvania residents.

4. The General Assembly direct a continuing study of medical education in Pennsylvania.

[Separate Report to Be Issued]

PRACTICES OF COMMONWEALTH-OWNED AND COMMONWEALTH-AIDED COLLEGES AND UNIVERSITIES RELATING TO ADMISSION OF, AND TUITION CHARGES TO, NONRESIDENT STUDENTS

Legislative Mandate:

To study and investigate practices of Commonwealth-owned and Commonwealth-aided colleges and universities relating to admission of, and tuition charges to, non-resident students.

Investigation:

Conferred with representatives of Commonwealth-owned and Commonwealth-aided colleges and universities relative to admission pracitces and tuition charges to both resident and nonresident students and reviewed reports made by these institutions to the Department of Public Instruction. Ascertained Commonwealth appropriations to both Commonwealth-owned and Commonwealth-aided institutions. In view of the fact that admission practices and tuition charges of Pennsylvania medical schools were covered by a separate study, they were not included in this investigation.

Strategic Facts:

1. The Commonwealth owns and operates fourteen teachers colleges and for the biennium 1953-55 granted financial aid to nine private institutions of higher learning:

2. For the biennium 1953-55, the General Assembly appropriated for "maintenance" in the state-owned and state-aided institutions the amounts shown below:

State teachers colleges	$13,365,000
State-aided institutions	40,491,880

3. Except for the Temple University School of Dentistry and The Pennsylvania State University, state-owned and state-aided institutions report no differential restriction upon the admission of non-resident students.

At Temple University, in the School of Dentistry only, admission is restricted to residents of Pennsylvania and to residents of states which have no dental schools. The Pennsylvania State University, for each of its schools, imposes restrictions upon the admission of nonresident students by specifying that non-resident enrollment may not constitute more than 10 percent of total enrollment.

4. In addition to, or in lieu of, the residence restrictions referred to above, some Pennsylvania institutions impose a higher tuition charge upon non-residents than upon Pennsylvania residents. The institutions which provide for differential tuition charges for resident and nonresident students are: The Pennsylvania State University, the state teachers colleges, Philadelphia Textile Institute, and the University of Pennsylvania School of Veterinary Medicine.

Specifically, The Pennsylvania State University charges student. The state teachers colleges charge a resident student. The state teachers colleges charge a rsident student a basic fee of $90 and non-residents a basic fee (referred to in the catalogs as a tuition charge) of $240. The School of Veterinary Medicine at the University of Pennsylvania waives the $600 tuition fee in the case of Pennsylvania residents. The Philadelphia Textile Institute makes a charge of $450 for American citizens and a charge of $550 for students who are other than American citizens.

5. The per-student costs of state-owned and state-aided institutions cannot be ascertained with any degree of exactitude because: (1) The institutions keep their accounts on a cash basis, which means that capital charges and value of donated services per student are not ascertainable; (2) many institutions both furnish instruction and engage in research but do not maintain records that facilitate allocation of either expenses on current account or capital costs to these two functions.

6. The table on the following page shows for state-owned and state-aided institutions as of 1952-53: (1) number of students, (2) percent of students who are Pennsylvania residents, (3) administration and instruction expense per student, (4) state appropriation per Pennsylvania resident student, and (5) state appropriation as percent of total receipts.

School	Estimated Number of Students *	Percent of Students Who are Pennsylvania Residents	Administration and Instruction Expense per Student †	State Appropriation per Pennsylvania Resident Student †	State Appropriation as Percent of Total Receipt †
(1)	(2)	(3)	(4)	(5)	(6)
State-owned teachers colleges	12,171	96.0%	$385.89	$496.41	56.4%
State aided institutions:
Lincoln University	347	42.7	670.69	1,118.24	29.2
Moore Institute of Art, Science and Industry	276	83.3	538.67	108.80	10.0
National Agricultural College	194	39.1	843.57	407.89	8.8
Pennsylvania State University	20,536	89.7	572.90	465.10	33.5
Philadelphia Museum School of Art ..	600	84.7	322.14	113.15	18.3
Philadelphia Textile Institute	344	36.3	646.35	506.00	16.8
Temple University	16,070	81.1	311.92	136.48	21.6
University of Pennsylvania	13,567	66.7	1,667.48	320.68	7.0
University of Pittsburgh	13,279	96.7	829.46	231.29	19.5

* In the case of institutions having other than full-time students, "estimated number of students" was calculated by use of coefficients furnished by the institutions concerned.

† As reported by the institutions to the Department of Public Instruction.

Recommendations:

It is recommended that:

1. State-owned teachers colleges be required to charge nonresident students fees which closely approximate the costs of the services furnished by these institutions.

2. State teachers colleges be directed, and state-aided institutions be requested, to keep adequate records; such records to reflect, by curricula, current cash expenses, charges on capital account, and value of donated services.

HIGHWAY SAFETY

Legislative Mandate:

To study and investigate highway safety and factors responsible for highway accidents.

Investigation:

Reviewed motor vehicle accident statistics, including fatality rates in the United States for the year 1953 and fatality, fatal accident, injury, injury accident, and property-damage accident rates in Pennsylvania over the past 25 years. Examined available data on sex and age of operators involved in motor vehicle accidents in Pennsylvania for the years 1929, 1934, 1939, and 1944 to 1953, inclusive. Studied the cost and extent of Pennsylvania public school driver-education program. Examined accident data for the first 60-miles-per-hour speed zone on rural Pennsylvania highways. Examined comparative accident statistics for the Pennsylvania Turnpike, 1951 through October, 1954. Investigated coordination of work among Commonwealth administrative agencies concerned with highway safety. Studied graduated penalties for traffic violations and point systems for suspension or revocation of operators' permits. Investigated current accident reporting practices and current accident-prevention programs. Investigated factors responsible for highway accidents.

Strategic Facts:

1. In Pennsylvania, the motor vehicle accident fatality rate during 1953 was 4.9 deaths per hundred million miles of vehicle travel (based on fatalities occurring during the year), the fifth lowest rate in the forty-eight states. The United States average rate was 7.0 deaths per hundred million miles of vehicle travel.

Taking into account all deaths attributable to 1953 motor vehicle accidents (whether death occurred during or subsequent to 1953), the motor vehicle accident fatality rate for Pennsylvania was 5.1 deaths per hundred million miles of vehicle travel—the lowest Pennsylvania motor vehicle fatality rate for the years studied (1929 through 1953). The 1953 fatal accident rate was also the lowest for the years studied. However, the rate for all motor vehicle accidents and the rates for injury accidents, injuries, and property-damage accidents in 1953 were not the lowest observed for the years 1929 through 1953.

For the postwar years 1947 through 1953, each of the six rates showed relatively small variations.

2. The relative stability of accident rates (because of use of mileage factors which have steadily increased during the postwar years) obscures the general rise in numbers of motor vehicle accidents and the consequent cost of motor vehicle accidents to Pennsylvania.

A total of 129,791 accidents involving 237,448 drivers and vehicles occurred in Pennsylvania in 1953, the greatest annual numbers for the years studied (1929 through 1953). Also at all-time high levels for the year 1953 were property-damaged accidents, injury accidents, and injuries. The number of fatal accidents in 1953, although exceeded in many years, was greater than the number in the postwar years of 1947 and 1950. Similarly, the number of traffic fatalities in 1953 was greater than the number recorded in certain other postwar years (1947, 1949, 1950, and 1951).

Costs of 1953 motor vehicle accidents in Pennsylvania (including damage to vehicles and property, medical expenses, wage losses, and insurance overhead cost—but not claims paid), estimated on the basis of National Safety Council data, were in excess of $89,600,000.

3. Over the past 25 years, according to data compiled by Commonwealth highway safety agencies, the percentage of women drivers involved in Pennsylvania motor vehicle accidents has increased, and the percentage of drivers 25 years of age and over involved in accidents has increased. However, sex and age distributions of Pennsylvania motor vehicle operators as a group have, in all likelihood, also changed during that period. Similarly, differences undoubtedly exist in numbers of miles driven by operators in different sex and age groups. Reliable estimates of the distributions of all Pennsylvania drivers by sex, age, and miles driven are not currently made by Commonwealth highway safety agencies.

4. Teaching of safe driving of motor vehicles in the public schools is authorized by Act No. 475, Session of 1947 (1947, June 28, P. L. 1109, as amended).

Act No. 499, Session of 1951 (1951 [January 8, 1952], P. L. 1859), increased the motor vehicle learner's permit fee from $2 to $4 and provided that as much of the fee received for each permit as necessary, but not more than $2, should be appropriated to the Department of Public Instruction for expenses in carrying out a standardized program of driver education and for making payments to school districts complying with the standardized program.

During the registration year 1952, the number of learner's permits issued was 401,269; during 1953, the number issued was 425,612. In other words, about $800,000 in receipts for the year 1952 and about $850,000 in receipts for the year 1953 were available for both administration of the driver-training program and subsidy payments to school districts having approved driver-training programs.

Commonwealth reimbursement to a given district is calculated by multiplying the amount of available funds by the ratio of average daily membership of pupils over 15 years of age in the driver-training program in the given district to the total average daily membership of pupils over 15 years of age in driver-training courses in all school districts of the Commonwealth. However, under the statute, payments may not exceed the sum of $10 for each such pupil per school year.

During the school year 1952-53, average daily membership in driver-education programs was 21,433, and Commonwealth reimbursement on account of driver-education programs for the school year 1952-53 amounted to $214,330, a 37.3 percent increase from the 1951-52 reimbursement of $156,090.

Reliable data for evaluation of this program in terms of estimated reductions in numbers of accidents are not currently available.

5. Under the provisions of Act No. 191, Session of 1953 (1953, July 27, P. L. 649), the Secretary of Highways may, after due investigation, establish on rural state highways speed zones with 60-miles-per-hour speed limits. Pursuant to the provisions of this act, as of January 10, 1954, an approximately 30-mile section of four-lane divided highway on U. S. Route 22, between Lower Paxton Township in Dauphin County and Bethel Borough in Berks County, was established as a 60-mile-per-hour speed zone.

Comparative data from accident investigation records of the Pennsylvania State Police for motor vehicle accidents occuring on this Highway section, January 10 to July 31, 1953 (speed limit 50 miles per hour), and January 10 to July 31, 1954 (speed limit 60 miles per hour), follow.

	January 10 to July 31, 1953 (50-miles-per-hour speed limit)	January 10 to July 31, 1954 (60-miles-per-hour speed limit)
Total number of accidents	37	32
Number of fatal accidents	1	1
Number of injury accidents	16	11
Number of property-damage accidents	20	20
Number of persons killed	1	1
Number of persons injured	30	24

Although the number of accidents shown for 1954 is less than for 1953, insufficient data are available to indicate that this difference is statistically significant.

6. The numbers of fatal accidents and fatalities on the Pennsylvania Turnpike System were greater in 1953 than in 1952. The fatal accident rate and the fatality rate (both in terms of hundreds of millions of vehicle miles) also increased. Numbers of injury accidents, injuries, and property-damage accidents and rates for each of these decreased.

Turnpike data for the first ten months of 1954 show marked decreases when compared with the similar time period for 1953. Number of fatal accidents decreased from 58 (January through October, 1953) to 35 (January through October, 1954). For the same time period, fatalities decreased from 77 to 46, the fatal accident rate decreased from 5.6 to 3.4, and the fatality rate from 7.4 to 4.4 (all in terms of hundreds of millions of vehicle miles). Similarly, there were fewer injury accidents, injuries, and property-damage accidents. In the first ten months of 1953, there were 430 injury accidents with 894 persons injured. During the comparable 1954 time period, there were 383 injury accidents and 739 persons injured. Property-damage accidents decreased in number from 910 to 612. These decreases (taken in conjunction with relatively stable vehicle mileage) produced lower accident rates for the first ten months of 1954 than for the first ten months of 1953.

7. Current administrative practice in Pennsylvania does not include regular reporting by the Bureau of Highway Safety of the Department of Revenue to the Department of Highways of road defect statements contained in operators' accident reports.

8. Upon conviction of a driver for violation of motor vehicle statutes, a penalty (fine or imprisonment) for the violation is imposed, and driving privileges may be suspended or revoked. The severity of penalties in terms of fines or imprisonment generally varies with the gravity of the offense and, in certain states, varies with repetition of specific offenses.

Loss of driving privileges which, though not classified as a penalty, does in fact penalize offending drivers, may follow a single violation of motor vehicle statutes or may result after several violations. Point systems are used in some states to indicate to drivers the relative seriousness of traffic violations and to cumulate, for suspension or revocation purposes, different types of violations or repetitions of specific violations.

From study of state motor vehicle accident fatality rates, it appears that no direct relationship exists between graduation of penalties or point systems and motor vehicle accident fatality rates.

9. Motor vehicle accidents are caused by driver, vehicle, and road factors, singly or in combination. The importance of the driver factor in responsibility for Pennsylvania motor vehicle accidents is indicated by the following data for the year 1953:

Number of driver violations of the Vehicle Code at times of accidents as percentage of total number of accidents	92.5 percent
Number of identifiable vehicle defects at times of accidents as percentage of total number of accidents	3.9 percent
Number of road defects at places of accidents as percentage of total number of accidents	7.4 percent

Current traffic safety practice includes measures which deal with each of these three factors.

In Pennsylvania, periodic examinations of motor vehicle operators are not required, although semi-annual inspections of vehicles are. Applicants for drivers' licenses are required to pass oral and driving examinations and vision tests before they may be granted the privilege of operating motor vehicles in the Commonwealth. Operators' permits may be revoked or suspended for cause by the Secretary of Revenue. At the discretion of the Secretary, operators may be subject to re-examination. In certain of the public schools within the Commonwealth, driver education courses are offered. In 1953, these last two programs—re-examination and high school driver education—affected but 0.8 percent of the 4,316,654 licensed Pennsylvania operators.

10. Increases in numbers of motor vehicle accidents have not been halted by increased numbers of suspensions or revocations of operators' permits:

Year	Number of Motor Vehicle Accidents	Number of Suspensions and Revocations of Operators' Permits
(1)	(2)	(3)
1950	116,139	32,950
1951	123,088	43,268
1952	126,820	51,652
1953	129,791	57,136

The effect of suspensions and revocations of operators' permits (or of arrests or other elements) on frequency of motor vehicle accidents cannot be ascertained on the basis of existing data.

11. In Pennsylvania at the present time, information concerning drivers involved in highway accidents and drivers of vehicles as a whole is not adequate for: (1) development of reliable motor vehicle accident rates for sex and age groups of Pennsylvania drivers; (2) identification of those driver factors which, alone or in combination with other factors, predispose certain operators or groups of operators toward accidents; and (3) evaluation of specific driver-training and examination programs that would be effective in preventing motor vehicle accidents.

a. With respect to development of reliable accident rates:

(1). The base for rate computations—precise information concerning numbers of drivers and miles driven, classified by sex, age, and driving experience—is not available.

(2). Accident report data are inadequate. Operators' reports are frequently inaccurate or incomplete. Comparison of a sample of 100 operators' reports with accident investigation reports of the Pennsylvania State Police (at the present time, approximately 20 percent of all accidents occurring in the state are investigated by the Pennsylvania State Police) showed that all 100 contained discrepancies, 48 contained from 1 to 8 discrepancies, 46 contained from 9 to 16 discrepancies, and 6 more than 16 discrepancies.

Although drivers are required by statute to report all accidents involving property damage exceeding $100, all accidents involving injuries, and all accidents involving parked vehicles, it is probable that there is frequent failure to report.

b. With respect to identification of driver factors: Only general descriptions of accidents are available from current reports. Descriptions of near-accidents might often be no different from reported descriptions of actual accidents. Available information does not include the degree or importance of physical and mental driver factors. Further, phycho-physical testing of drivers involved in accidents is not generally employed.

c. With respect to evaluation of training and examination programs:

(1). Valid comparisons of the efficiency of programs cannot be made in the absence of reliable accident rate data.

(2). Without identification of driver factors which predispose toward accidents, highway safety programs cannot be expected to produce optimal results.

12. Significant driver factors responsible for highway accidents are aptitude for vehicle operation (physical and mental factors) and acquired skills of vehicle operation (driver education and relevant driving experience factors).

Meaningful information on driver aptitude and skills includes:

a. Estimates of general levels of aptitudes and skills and minimum levels required for safe motor vehicle operation.

b. Information concerning driving conditions (in terms of vehicle, road, traffic, and weather) for which specified levels or aptitudes and skills would be inadequate.

c. Evaluation of interrelations between driver factors and vehicle and road factors in accident situations and near-accident situations.

13. Meaningful rates for driver involvement in motor vehicle accidents would include the following:

a. Accident involvement rates, for identifiable sex and age groups, in terms of numbers or drivers and in terms of miles driven.

b. Accident involvement rates, in terms of years of driving experience. If valid driver characteristic data are collected, reliable accident rates can be established for all traffic accidents, fatal accidents, injury accidents, and property-damage accidents. Valid estimates of the distributions, by sex, age, annual miles of vehicle operation, and years of driving experience, are needed for all drivers and for drivers involved in accidents.

Recommendations:

It is recommended that:

1. The General Assembly authorize a complete and comprehensive survey dealing with safety upon highways in Pennsylvania, to include, but not be limited to:

a. Driver factors in conjunction with vehicle and highway factors

b. Driver aptitudes and acquired skills for motor vehicle operation

c. Re-examination of accident experience with respect to stopped school buses since enactment of Pennsylvania motor vehicle statutes dealing therewith.

2. Funds for this comprehensive highway safety study be appropriated from the Motor License Fund.

3. Provision be made for furnishing to each district and county highway superintendent information concerning accidents occurring in his district.

[Separate report to be issued].

THIRD-STRUCTURE TAXES

Legislative Mandate:

To study and investigate the operation of "third-structure taxes" as imposed by other states upon highway users, with particular emphasis upon weight-distance taxes.

Investigation:

Studied third-structure taxes and their importance in highway-user tax systems. Surveyed types of current state third-structure statutes, and compiled summarizations of state weight-distance tax statutes. Ascertained states in which weight distance or distance tax statutes had been repealed and ascertained years of enactment of weight-tribution of weight-distance revenues to total receipts from all highway-user levies. Compiled and analyzed information on costs of collection of weight-distance taxes. Studied administrative regulations dealing with charges to vehicle operators for auditing records for tax purposes. Investigated the effect of enactment of weight-distance tax statutes on numbers of motor truck registrations. Studied weight-distance tax payments and total highway-user tax payments in selected states for selected commercial vehicles. Reviewed compliance costs imposed by weight-distance tax statutes on operators of commercial vehicles. Investigated provisions of reciprocity agreements between Pennsylvania and each of the other forty-seven states with respect to third-structure taxes and commercial motor vehicle registration. Ascertained current status of third-structure levy reciprocity among states having weight-distance taxes. Studied decision of Supreme Court of the United States: Latham Castle, Attorney General of the State of Illinois, et al., Petitioners, v. Hayes Freight Lines, Inc., U.S. Supreme Court No. 44.—October Term, 1954, argued November 17, 1954, decided December 6, 1954, 75 S. Ct. 191.

Strategic Facts:

1. The term, "third-structure tax," is generally used to indicate a tax (but not a certificate or permit fee) on vehicles operated for hire or compensation or on large commercial vehicles generally. Registration fees and fuels taxes are usually termed the first two "structures" of highway-user tax systems.

The first motor vehicle registration statute was enacted in New York in 1901, and motor fuel was first taxed by Oregon in 1919. Of state weight-distance tax statutes currently in effect, the South Carolina third-structure levy was enacted earliest—in the year 1925.

2. Third-structure taxes (as distinct from public utilities commissions' fees or other certificate, permit, or trip fees, regardless of basis of charge) are levied in twenty-six states and the District of Columbia.

Among types of third-structure taxes are:

a. Special gross receipts taxes on motor carriers, levied by nine states (including Pennsylvania)

b. Flat-rate taxes (based on weight or capacity of vehicle or type of business), levied by two states and the District of Columbia

c. Weight-distance taxes (generally, those based on mileage and weight or number of axles, or those combining mileage, weight, and flat-rate fees), levied by fifteen states.

3. States utilizing weight-distance taxes and the base or combination of bases used are:

Alabama, Ohio	Axles and mileage
Kansas, Michigan, New York	Gross weight and mileage
Colorado, Florida, New Mexico, Wyoming	Net weight or unladen weight and mileage
North Dakota, South Carolina	Optional: net weight or unladen weight and mileage or flat fee
Illinois, Oregon, South Dakota	Optional: gross weight and mileage or flat fee
Idaho	Combination gross weight and mileage and flat fee

Among states which utilized weight-distance (ton-mile) taxes but which have repealed them are Iowa, Maryland, Utah, West Virginia, and Wisconsin. Among states which utilized distance (mileage) levies but which repealed them are Georgia, Kentucky, Mississippi, Oklahoma, and Tennessee.

Of the fifteen weight-distance tax statutes currently in effect, that of South Carolina was enacted earliest—in the year 1925. The Florida statute was enacted in 1929; statutes of Colorado and Kansas, in 1931; those of Michigan, New Mexico, North Dakota, and Oregon, in 1933; Illinois and Wyoming, in 1935; South Dakota, in 1939; and Alabama, in 1940. Weight-distance taxes enacted during the postwar period include those of Idaho and New York in 1951 and that of Ohio in 1953.

4. Revenues from third-structure taxes do not constitute major portions of total receipts from highway-user levies. During the year 1953, fourteen states (the Ohio tax did not become fully effective until 1954) had weight-distance taxes. Weight-distance taxes accounted for less than 5 percent of total highway-user levies in seven of these states, 5 to 10 percent in four states, and 10 to 20 percent in three states. In the only one of the Middle Atlantic states having a weight-distance tax—New York—receipts from weight-distance taxes accounted for 5.5 pecent of total highway-user revenues for the year 1953.

5. Costs of collection as a percent of weight-distance tax revenues, as reported to Joint State Government Commission by weight-distance tax states, varied from 2.1 percent in Ohio to 23.2 percent in Michigan.

Variation of percents of costs of collection among third-structure tax states are as follows:

State	Year of Latest Available Data	Total Weight-distance Tax Revenues	Cost of Collection as Percent of Total Revenues	Items not Included in Cost of Collection
(1)	(2)	(3)	(4)	(5)
Alabama	1953-54	$1,192,800	6.2%	*
Colorado	1954	2,950,000	10.1	*
Florida	1953-54	632,863	†	†
Idaho	9 months of 1954	77,180	†	†
Illinois	10 months of 1954	1,985,000	†	†
Kansas	1953-54	3,336,377	8.6	Enforcement

South Dakota	1953-54	157,287	9.5	Enforcement, issuance of permits
Wyoming	11 months of 1954	2,138,558	9.1	.....

* Information on cost items included or excluded not available.
† Data not available.

6. Charges for auditing records of out-of-state carriers are frequently made by weight-distance tax states. These charges generally include travel expenses and subsistence allowances of auditors; subsistence allowances are usually about $9 per day. Among states making these charges are Colorado, Idaho, New York, and Michigan.

7.Indexes (average 1935-39 registrations=100) of private and commercial motor truck registrations in the United States and in fifteen states having weight-distance taxes, 1920 through 1953, indicate that, prior to World War II, enactment of third-structure taxes generally had little effect on truck registrations. An exception to this rule may be observed for Florida, where subsequent to the enactment of the weight-distance tax the index of motor truck registrations dropped from 86 in 1929 to 79 in 1930, a decline of 8.1 percent; the index for the United States for these years rose from 83 to 86, or 3.6 percent.

For the postwar years, it appears that enactment of third-structure taxes has directly or indirectly affected truck registrations. For example, subsequent to enactment in 1951 of a weight-distance tax, the New York index of truck registrations dropped from 140 to 138, a decrease of 1.4 percent, whereas the index for the United States rose from 210 to 215, an increase of 2.4 percent.

Revision of tax rate structure may also affect registrations. In Oregon, at the time of revision of its weight-distance tax statute (1951), the index of motor truck registrations dropped from 234 to 129, a decrease of 44.9 percent, while the index for the United States rose from 201 to 210, an increase of 4.5 percent.

8. Although in no state did weight-distance taxes exceed 20 percent of total receipts from highway users, in certain states weight-distance taxes constitute sizeable portions of tax payments on individual vehicles. For example, for a selected 40,000-pound truck-tractor semitrailer combination vehicle operating as an intrastate contract carrier, third-structure taxes are estimated to be 51.7 percent of total fee and tax payments on such a vehicle in New Mexico, 46.7 percent in Colorado, and 42.6 percent in New York.

Weight-distance tax statutes may generate indirect costs for the vehicle operator because of losses of registration plate reciprocity. In the event that vehicle mileage and weight records are not maintained (such records are generally required for operation in intrastate or interstate commerce), direct weight-distance tax compliance costs are generated.

9. Reciprocity agreements between Pennsylvania and other states, as of November 15, 1954, deal with motor vehicle registrations and third-structure taxes. As of that date, Pennsylvania had no vehicle-weight reciprocity agreements.

Pennsylvania extends reciprocity with respect to its third structure gross receipts tax to all but 16 of the 48 states. These 16 states include (among the weight-distance tax states) Idaho, Illinois, Kansas, New York, North Dakota, Oregon, South Carolina, and South Dakota. None of these states exempts Pennsylvania vehicles from its weight-distance taxes. Of the 31 states to which Pennsylvania does extend gross receipts tax reciprocity, 7 levy weight-distance taxes. In four of them (Colorado, New Mexico, Ohio, and Wyoming), Pennsylvania vehicles are required to pay weight-distance taxes, while in Alabama, Florida, and Michigan, according to available records, they are not.

Full reciprocity agreements covering registration of property-carrying vehicles are in effect with 38 states and the District of Columbia. No registration reciprocity exists between Pennsylvania and the following states: Arizona, Idaho, Nevada, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Oregon, South Carolina, South Dakota, and Utah. (South Carolina has a unilateral arrangement which permits out-of-state carriers to make one round trip per week per vehicle without requiring that the vehicle be registered in that state.)

Reciprocity provisions relating to registration of passenger carriers generally parallel those relating to property-carrying vehicles. Analysis of Pennsylvania agreements currently in force indicate the following differences:

a. Reciprocity agreements do not extend to common carriers of passengers for the states of Mississippi, New Mexico, Tennessee, and West Virginia.

b. Reciprocity agreements do not extend to contract carriers of passengers for the states of Mississippi and Tennessee.

10. Of the fifteen states having weight-distance taxes, seven (Colorado, New Mexico, New York, North Dakota, Ohio, Oregon, and Wyoming) do not have reciprocal agreements exempting from their weight-distance taxes the vehicles of other states having such levies. However, North Dakota vehicles are not subject to the third-structure taxes of Michigan or South Dakota, Ohio vehicles are not subject to the Michigan levy, and certain Oregon and Wyoming vehicles are not subject to the Idaho tax.

Reports to Joint State Government Commission indicate that the following weight-distance tax reciprocity agreements are currently in effect among the other eight of the fifteen states having such levies:

Alabama—agreements with Florida, Illinois, Michigan, and South Carolina.

Florida—argeements with Alabama, Illinois, Michigan, and South Carolina.

Idaho—no reciprocal agreements; limited tax exemptions granted to vehicles from Oregon and Wyoming.

Illinois—agreements with Alabama, Florida, Michigan, and South Dakota; limited exemptions granted vehicles from Kansas.

Kansas—no reciprocal agreements; limited tax exemptions granted vehicles from Alabama and Illinois.

Michigan—agreements with Alabama, Florida, Illinois, and South Carolina; tax exemptions granted vehicles from North Dakota and Ohio.

South Carolina—agreements with Alabama, Florida, and Michigan.

South Dakota—agreement with Illinois; tax exemptions granted to North Dakota vehicles.

11. The United States Supreme Court, in its decision of December 6, 1954, in the case of Latham Castle, Attorney General of the State of Illinois, et al., Petitioners, v. Hayes Freight Lines, Inc., affirming the Supreme Court of Illinois, held that the right of defendant carriers to use the Illinois highways for interestate transportation of goods could not be suspended by the state under a state law which limits the weight of freight carried in commercial trucks over its highways, provides for balanced distribution of freight loads in relation to the truck axles, and makes repeated violations of these provisions by trucks of the carrier punishable by total suspension of the carrier's rights to use the state's highways for periods from ninety days to one year.

PENNSYLVANIA MINERAL DEPOSITS

Legislative Mandate:

To study and investigate available information relating to mineral deposits within the Commonwealth.

Investigation:

Examined the historical trend of mineral production in the Commonwealth, the current status of production, value of production, number of employes, and wages in the mineral industries, and estimates of recoverable mineral reserves. Met with a panel of specialists from the United States Department of the Interior and three Pennsylvania universities who pointed out possible means and ways of bringing about optimum utlization of the Commonwealth's mineral resources. Met with labor and management representatives and reviewed the measures which might be taken to improve the position of Pennsylvania's mineral industries.

Strategic Facts:

1. In 1952, the latest year for which comprehensive statistics are available, Pennsylvania's total mineral production was valued at $1,146,000,000. During the same year, the value of fuels produced—coal (bituminous and anthracite), petroleum, and natural gas—amounted to $930,000,000, which represents 81 percent of the value of all mineral production within Pennsylvania. Again in 1952, fuels accounted for approximately 92 percent of both the number of employes in the mineral industries and the total wages paid by these industries.

2. Between 1943 and 1953, total production of bituminous coal in Pennsylvania decreased form 139,801,000 to 91,938,000 tons, a decrease of 34.2 percent. Over the same period, the total number of employes in the bituminous industry decreased from 105,900 to 69,100, a decrease of 34.8 percent. The decreases in production and employment reflect primarily decreases in commercial production, which declined 45.6 percent; captive production decreased but 2.8 percent.

3. Anthracite, like bituminous, production has been contracting. Between 1943 and 1953, production of anthracite coal declined 50 percent. The decline continued during 1954. Employment in the anthracite coal industry fell from 79,369 in 1943 to 56,952 in 1953, a decrease of 28.3 percent.

4. Petroleum and natural gas tend to occur together. In Pennsylvania, Pennsylvania Grade Crude oil production at current levels is made possible by so-called "secondary" recovery methods, in which the crude petroleum is forced to the surface by injecting water or gas under pressure into selected parts of the fields. In 1953, 10,669,000 barrels of Pennsylvania Grade Crude were produced within the Commonwealth.

5. Total known oil reserves in Pennsylvania recoverable by present methods are estimated at about 111,000,000 barrels. In other words, unless new recovery techniques are developed, the life expectancy of the oil fields in Pennsylvania is about one decade. This differs markedly from the life expectancy of Pennsylvania coal; Bituminous coal, on the basis of an annual production of 92,000,000 tons, has a life expectancy of more than 300 years, and anthracite on the basis of an annual production of 30,000,000 tons, has an expectancy of about 200 years.

6. In the aggregate, minerals other than fuels accounted for 19 percent of the total value of Pennsylvania mineral production in 1952. The principal minerals of this group and their percentage contributions to the total value of Pennsylvania mineral production in 1952 are: cement, 8.99 percent; stone, 3.93 percent; sand and gravel, 1.75 percent; and clay, 1.05 percent.

In contrast to the decline in production of mineral fuels in Pennsylvania, the four principal nonfuel minerals registered substantial increases in production over the decade 1943-1952. Cement output more than doubled, while clay output increased threefold. Stone production increased 28 percent, and sand and gravel, 58 percent.

7. Adequate geological maps exist for only about one-third of the area of Pennsylvania. The Commonwealth appropriated the following amounts for mineral research and geological survey work for the biennium 1953-55:

Department of Internal Affairs:
Topographic and Geologic Survey	$250,000
The Pennsylvania State University:
School of Mineral Industries	245,000
Total	$495,000

The total annual allocation for mineral research and geological survey work represents approximately .02 percent of the value of mineral production in Pennsylvania.

With respect to organizational pattern and performance, the geological surveying and mineral research program in Illinois is judged to be outstanding. The Illinois Geological Survey, located at the University of Illinois, is under the jurisdiction of a six-man Board of Natural Resources and Conservation. The Illinois survey has a staff of 115 technical employes. Duties of the survey are to study the location of underground resources, analyze extraction processes, and improve methods of mineral utilization.

The annual budget of the Illinois Geological Survey is about $750,000, or about .15 percent of the total value of mineral production in Illinois. Hence, relative to the value of mineral production, the State of Illinois appropriates about seven times as much money for geological survey and mineral research as does the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

Recommendations:

It is recommended that:

1. A Resource and Industrial Development Board be established for the purpose of co-ordinating geological survey, mineral research, and development work, the membership of such board to consist of representatives of management, labor, and the sciences.

2. The technical operation of the Pennsylvania geologic survey be transferred to State College, Pennsylvania, and the sum of $700,000 for the biennium 1955-57 be appropriated for purposes of the survey.

3. The appropriation to The Pennsylvania State University of Mineral Industries, be increased by $250,000 for the biennium 1955-57 for the purpose of developing better methods of mineral extraction and utilization.

4. The mineral industries be contacted with a view of ascertaining the extent of possible private financial participation in research, survey, and developmental activities.

LIVESTOCK MARKETING

Legislative Mandate:

To study and investigate livestock auction sales and other methods of buying and selling livestock.

Investigation:

Ascertained statutory provisions relating to livestock dealers, livestock auctions, and stockyards in Pennsylvania. Determined the cost of veterinary, sanitary, and inspection services rendered at auctions and stockyards by the Commonwealth. Reviewed practices of other states regarding licensing of livestock dealers and auctions. Studied historical trends in livestock marketing methods in Pennsylvania.

Strategic Facts:

1. Prior to the depression of the '30s, stockyards accounted for by far the greater part of livestock sales. In the past twenty years, however, in both Pennsylvania and the nation, auctions have become increasingly important livestock marketing centers. Other marketing methods—through dealers for resale, and directly to packers and butchers—account for only a small portion of total livestock sales.

In 1953, the 61 auctions in Pennsylvania handled 1,020,000 head of livestock. Livestock receipts at the Lancaster and Pittsburgh stockyards were 464,000 head and 183,000 head, respectively.

In Pennsylvania, the auction trading radius generally does not exceed 50 miles, and it is estimated that well over 90 percent of livestock traded at Pennsylvania auctions is of Pennsylvania origin. By contrast, livestock shipments from out of state by both rail and truck are common at the Pittsburgh and Lancaster stockyards. A study of the point of origin of livestock receipts at the Lancaster stockyards for 1953 shows that animals were received from 34 other states and that out-of-state shipments accounted for 30 percent of total livestock receipts.

2. Commonwealth regulation of livestock auctions and stockyards is directed towards curbing the spread of livestock disease. Regulations pertaining to the marketing of reactor cattle—animals which by official laboratory test are judged positive to Bang's disease (brucellosis) or tuberculosis—specify that these animals may be sold only through the Lancaster or Pittsburgh stockyards or directly to a licensed dealer or licensed slaughtering establishment. Herd owners have contended that available marketing outlets are insufficient to establish competitive prices for reactor cattle. The Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture advises that it can develop methods, rules, and regulations which will assure the safe handling of reactor cattle at livestock auctions.

3. All livestock dealers, including auctions and commission merchants operating at stockyards, are required to obtain an annual license at a fee of $5. Agents of dealers must obtain an annual license at a cost of $1. These license fees have been in effect since 1937.

Auctions must employ a licensed veterinarian to inspect all animals, to vaccinate hogs sold for purposes other than immediate slaughter, to quarantine animals not fit for human consumption, and to supervise cleaning and disinfecting the premises after each sale. Agents of the Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture periodically inspect auctions to insure that proper veterinary services are being provided and that sanitary premises are maintained. The annual cost to the Commonwealth of auction inspection and related administrative activity is estimated at $3,800. Revenues to the Commonwealth from auctions amount to $5 per year per auction, or about $325 annually.

At the two stockyards in Pennsylvania, veterinary inspection service and sanitary supervision is provided by state-employed veterinarians. It is estimated that the cost to the Commonwealth of providing these services is about $12,950 annually. Total revenues to the Commonwealth from dealers' licenses obtained by commission merchants operating at the stockyards amount to about $100; the stockyards are not required to obtain a license or pay a fee to the Commonwealth.

4. The federal government, under the authority of the Packers and Stockyards Act of 1921 and supplementary legislation, has established regulations applicable to public livestock markets of which "the area available for handling livestock is 20,000 square feet or greater. The regulations specify that livestock markets and commission agents at livestock markets must execute and maintain a performance bond or its equivalent, the amount of which is determined on the basis of the daily volume of business. In Pennsylvania, three establishments are under federal regulation: the stockyards at Pittsburgh and Lancaster and the livestock auction at New Holland.

The Commonwealth does not require that livestock auctions post a bond. Of thirty-four states which responded to a Commission questionnaire, sixteen require that a bond or other proof of financial responsibility be maintained by livestock auctions. Some of these states require a flat bond, typically $10,000. In other states, the amount of the bond is determined by sales volume.

Recommendations:

It is recommended that:

1. The license fee for livestock dealers be $10, and that dealers who are commission agents at stockyards pay in addition, $.02 per head of livestock sold.

2. All livestock auctions be required to maintain bonds comparable to those which the federal government requires at marketing establishments under its jurisdiction.

3. The sale of reactor cattle be permitted at livestock auctions under conditions specified in regulations of the Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture relating to the transportation, handling, and sale of reactor cattle.

PENSION AND OTHER EMPLOYE BENEFIT PLANS

Legislative Mandate:

To study and investigate public and private pensions, pension funds, and pension plans.

Pursuant to the authority vested in the Commission by the Act of 1937, July 1, P. L. 2460, as amended 1939, June 26, P. L. 1084, the Commission expanded the scope of the study to include temporary nonoccupational disability plans and medical expense plans.

Investigation:

1. Estimated, on the basis of a survey of Pennsylvania adults, coverage, overlapping coverage, and expected benefits under public and private pension plans, as of March, 1954. The survey was restricted to persons aged 25 or over whose income, or whose spouse's income, did not exceed $5,000 in 1953.

2. By means of a survey of employers whose employes were covered by Pennsylvania Unemployment Compensation, made investigations of:

a. 1953 coverage, characteristics, and effects of private employment pension plans,

b. 1953 coverage, characteristics, and effects of temporary nonoccupational disability plans, and

c. 1953 coverage of medical expense plans.

Strategic Facts:

1. The following estimates relate to Pennsylvania adults having the age and income characteristics specified above:

a. Coverage, by number and types of pension programs, is shown in the table below.

b. Total monthly pensions (excluding veterans' pensions) expected by married couples varied from $20-$39 to more than $200; the average (median) was between $120 and $139. Those expected by other male adults varied from $1-$19 to more than $200, with an average (median) between $80 and $99. Those expected by other female adults varied from $20-$39 to more than $200, with an average (median) between $40 and $59.

2. The survey of employers subject to the provisions of the Pennsylvania Unemployment Compensation law showed that about 35 percent of their employes were covered by private employment pension plans in 1953. The following estimates were made concerning those employes covered by pensions plans:

Number and Types of Pension Programs	Married Couples	Other Male Adults	Other Female Adults
(1)	(2)	(3)	(4)
Total Covered	93%	87%	64%
By 1 type of program	37	36	51
By 2 types of programs	40	43	13
By 3 types of programs	16	8	..
Total Covered by:
Primary Social Security	85%	74%	42%
Pension plan in current or previous employment	43	32	15
Veterans' program ...	39	40	..
Survivors' programs ..	..	..	20

a. 10 percent were covered by plans started during the four-year period 1942-45, 18 percent by plans started during the period 1946-49, and 36 percent by plans started during the period 1950-53.

b. 79 percent were covered by plans providing for a "normal" retirement age of 65. In addition, a minimum length of service was usually required.

c. 54 percent were covered by plans which permitted members to work beyond "normal" retirement age without obtaining special permission, provided they were able to perform their jobs.

d. 42 percent were covered by plans having provisions for retirement prior to "normal" retirement age; some of these plans provided for vesting of (crediting employe with) employer contributions if the employe should leave after meeting specified age and/or service requirements. Plans with provision for vesting, but not for early retirement, covered another 4 percent of employes.

e. 69 percent were covered by plans having provisions for disability retirement, and 18 percent by plans without specific provisions for disability retirement but with provisions for vesting or early retirement.

f. 23 percent were covered by plans under which employes retiring with 25 years of service and average annual earnings of $3,000 would receive monthly pensions between $96 and $105, less primary Social Security benefits; 22 percent were covered by plans under which such employes would receive monthly pensions between $36 and $55, independent of Social Security benefits. Monthly pensions for employes retiring with 25 years of service and average annual earnings of $3,000 ranged from $50 to $150 under plans providing for deduction of primary Social Security benefits, and from $10 to $145 under plans providing benefits independent of Social Security.

g. 36 percent were covered by plans providing for vesting of employer contributions under specified conditions.

h. 85 percent were covered by plans having provisions for the funding, through insurance or a trust fund, of part or all of the liability for future pension payments. In some of these cases, the current extent of funding was not reported.

3. The survey of employers showed that about 48 per cent of their employes were covered by some type of temporary nonoccupational disability plan: 9 percent by sick-leave plans, 37 percent by part-pay plans, and 2 percent by plans of unreported type. (Subsequent communication with some employers, who did not originally report sick-leave plans, suggests that this type of coverage was under-reported.) The following estimates were made concerning those employes covered by part-pay plans (the percentages shown do not add to 100 because some employes are covered by plans for which characteristics were not fully reported or which had characteristics that were reported with low frequency):

a. 6 percent were covered by plans started during the four-year period 1942-45, 18 percent by plans started during the period 1946-49, and 38 percent by plans started during the period 1950-53.

b. 17 percent were covered by plans requiring six months of service for coverage, 26 percent by plans requiring three months of service for coverage, 18 percent by plans requiring one month of service for coverage, and 13 percent by plans with no service requirements for coverage.

c. 71 percent were covered by plans providing that benefits be paid beginning with the eighth day of sickness during each new period of disability. In the majority of these cases, benefits were payable beginning with the first day of disability resulting from an accident.

d. 50 percent were covered by plans which provided for a fixed weekly benefit and 25 percent by plans under which the size of benefit depended upon customary earnings with fixed minimum and maximum benefits.

e. 30 percent were covered by plans providing for a minimum weekly benefit between $23 and $27. Minimum weekly benefits (other than those expressed as a percentage of normal earnings) ranged from $5 to $93.

f. 40 percent were covered by plans providing for a maximum weekly benefit between $23 and $32. Maximum weekly benefits (other than those expressed as a percentage of normal earnings) ranged from $10 to $194.

g. 43 percent were covered by plans under which benefits were payable for a maximum of 26 weeks, and 41 percent by plans under which benefits were payable for a maximum of 13 weeks.

4. The survey of employers showed that about 54 percent of their employes were covered by medical expense plans in connection with their own employment.

[Separate Report to be Issued]

SOLICITATION ACT OF 1925

Legislative Mandate:

To study and investigate the effectiveness and administration of the Solicitation Act of 1925.

Investigation:

Reviewed the Solicitation Act of 1925 and its ten amendments (the last of which was adopted at the 1953 Session), together with the court decisions and opinions of the Attorney General dealing therewith. Conferred with representatives of the departments of Public Instruction and Military Affairs concerning their experience in administering the act, and examined the rules and regulations and the forms employed. Examined the statutes of other states regulating the solicitation of funds for charity and federal requirements for obtaining and maintaining exempt status with the Director of Internal Revenue from the payment of income tax to the federal government. Held a public hearing on June 21, 1954, to afford all interested parties an opportunity to be heard. Prepared a draft of a proposed solicitation act to replace the present law.

Strategic Facts:

1. Public solicitation for charitable and benevolent purposes, ministering to material and spiritual human needs, relieving the suffering of animals, and inculcating patriotism, is regulated by the Act of May 13, 1925, P. L. 644, as amended.

2. The Solicitation Act has been amended ten times as follows:

First Amendatory Act, April 18, 1927, P. L. 300, amended Section 4 by providing that no certificate of registration may be issued to anyone paying, for services for fund raising, in excess of 15 percent of the amount collected, or the sale price of anything or object, or the gross receipts from any public bazaar, sale, entertainment, or exhibition, or any similar means; and by providing for revocation of any certificate where such cost exceeds 15 percent.

Second Amendatory Act, June 22, 1931, P. L. 871, No. 285, amended Section 11 by providing that a religious organization to be exempt must be engaged in "raising funds for religious purposes." It also eliminated the exemption formerly extended to "community organizations within the Commonwealth."

Third Amendatory Act, May 23, 1933, P. L. 973, amended Section 9 by providing that the fee for registration be increased from $2 to $10.

Fourth Amendatory Act, June 20, 1935, P. L. 358, amended Sections 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 7, and 9—virtually the entire act, as only Sections 6 (All statements to be public records), 8 (Form of statement), 10 (Violations), 11 (Exempt organizations), 12 (Repeal) were not amended. This amendatory act provided that certificates of registration may not be issued to individuals and, where certificates of registration are withdrawn or not proceeded in, the fees paid shall be refunded.

Fifth Amendatory Act, May 3, 1943, P. L. 150, amended Section 11 to exempt from the provisions of the act "associations of alumni or alumnae thereof [colleges, schools and universities], raising funds for fellowships and scholarships."

Sixth Amendatory Act, May 21, 1943, P. L. 280, also amended Section 11 to exempt from the provisions of the act "any war veterans' organization or any subordinate units thereof, whenever the purpose for which it is soliciting funds has been approved by the Department of Military Affairs."

Seventh Amendatory Act, May 22, 1945, P. L. 844, No. 341, also amended Section 11 to exempt "federated women's clubs" from the provisions of the act.

Eighth Amendatory Act, June 5, 1947, P. L. 474, amended Sections 7 and 10 by providing additional limitations on solicitations, prohibiting the use of the fact of registration as a stamp of state approval, and creating relief in equity and additional penalties.

Ninth Amendatory Act, June 28, 1951, P. L. 922, amended all sections but Section 2 (Written appeal to public must state name of holder of certificate), Section 6 (All statements to be public records) and Section 12 (Repeal). This amendatory act transferred the administration and enforcement of the provisions of the act from the Department of Welfare to the Department of Public Instruction.

Tenth Amendatory Act, June 19, 1953, P. L. 292, amended Section 11 for the sixth time, to exempt "national service organizations, civic organizations, or nonprofit corporations (incorporated under the laws of the Commonwealth), which have obtained and is maintaining an exempt status with the Director of Internal Revenue from the payment of income tax to the Federal Government" and "national service clubs or local associations raising funds for child welfare projects."

3. Applications and registrations under the Solicitation Act, 1949 through 1953, are as follows:

Organizations Filing Under Section 1 of the Solicitation Act

Year	Applications Received	Certificates Granted	Applications Refused	Applications Withdrawn
1949	584	565	11	8
1950	626	598	20	8
1951	635	601	11	12
1952	685	573	1	10
1953	563	487	1	16

Registrations Granted Under Section 7 of the Solicitation Act

Year	Individuals	Corporations, Copartnerships, and Associations
1949	414	18
1950	387	20
1951	261	18

4. The following schedule sets forth the receipts and costs of administering the Solicitation Act for the fiscal years ended in 1953 and 1954. These two years were the first full fiscal years under the administration of the Department of Public Instruction.

All receipts from applicants are forwarded to the Department of Revenue. All refunds, granted only upon withdrawal of the application by the applicant, are made by the Board of Finance and Revenue upon the request of the applicant.

All costs are directly charged to the administration of this act except the cost of the time spent by a deputy superintendent, the chief of the Private Academic School Registration Section, and the legal advisor. It is estimated that $500.00 represents a reasonable annual allocation for administrative service rendered by these persons.

The approved budget for the 1953-55 biennium amounted to $21,400.00, of which $9,417.07 was expended during the first fiscal year.

Solicitation Act

5. The parties appearing at the public hearing presented suggestions and recommendations which are on file in the office of the Commission for use of the General Assembly upon request.

Recommendation:

That the proposed Solicitation Act be enacted.

DECEDENTS' ESTATES LAWS

Mandate:

To review the decedents' estates laws of the Commonwealth, consider amendments proposed thereto and recommend such amendments as may be deemed desirable for the better working of these laws.

Investigation:

Appointed, as advisors, the 27 judges and lawyers who served on the Commission's Decedents' Estates Advisory Committee in the drafting of the decedents' estates laws. Invited judges, lawyers, and others to submit their suggestions for amendment for review by the Commission and the advisors, so that recommendation concerning suggested amendments might be made by the Commission to the General Assembly early in the legislative session.

Strategic Facts:

The Joint State Government Commission as directed by Senate Resolution Serial No. 46 of the 1945 Session of the General Assembly, submitted drafts of an intestate act, a wills act, an estates act and a principal and income act, all of which were enacted in 1947. These, with comments, are contained in the Commission's report, Decedents' Estates Laws of 1947. And, as directed by Senate Resolution Serial No. 34 of the 1947 Session, the Commission submitted drafts of a fiduciaries act and a fiduciaries investment act, both of which were enacted in 1949. These, with comments, are contained in the Commission's report, Decedents' Estates Laws of 1949. Finally, as directed by House Concurrent Resolution No. 74 of the 1949 Session, the Commission submitted drafts of an incompetents' estates act, a register of wills act, an orphans' court act, and an estate tax apportionment act, all of which were enacted in 1951. These, with comments, are contained in the Commission's report, Decedents' Estates Laws of 1951.

These acts have been amended from time to time and suggestions for further amendment have been made by members of the legal profession.

LETTER OF TRANSMITTAL

To the Members of the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania:

The study of school health services was undertaken by the Joint State Government Commission as a part of the continuing study of the public schools of the Commonwealth directed by the General Assembly in House Concurrent Resolution No. 79, Session of 1953.

The continuing study of the public schools is being carried on under the general supervision of the Commission's Executive Committee. Under authority of Act of 1943, March 8, P. L. 13, Section 1, the Commission appointed a special subcommittee to review the school health program. Cognizant of the need for professional advice on the medical aspects of the program, the Commission also enlisted the cooperation of a distinguished group of Pennsylvania physicians, who served as a Medical Advisory Panel. On behalf of the Commission, the cooperation of the members of the special subcommittee and the Medical Advisory Panel is gratefully acknowledged.

All statements pertaining to medical practice and medical opinion were developed by the Medical Advisory Panel.

SUMMARY OF FINDINGS

1. The Commonwealth, through the Department of Health, makes available a variety of child health services that include both diagnosis of ailments and their treatment. The Commonwealth maintains a children's wing at the Mont Alto Sanatorium for the tubercular, operates (with federal support) clinics for crippled children in various parts of the state, operates the Crippled Children's Hospital at Elizabethtown and rheumatic fever clinics for children throughout the state, and maintains a Cleft Palate Division. In addition, children are provided care and treatment in the Commonwealth general and mental hospitals, which are under the supervision of the Department of Welfare.

II. The most costly health program for children in the Commonwealth is the school health program, administered by the state departments of Health, Public Instruction, and Public Assistance and local school districts. Under the program, biennial medical and dental examinations are made available to all pupils in public and private schools as well as to the employes of these institutions.

A. Load and cost of the program: School year 1952-53:

1. Medical examinations were given to 959,336 pupils enrolled in public and private schools.

2. Dental examinations were given to 922,894 pupils.

3. Commonwealth expenditures by category were as follows:

Medical examinations	$1,473,000
Dental examinations	629,500
School nursing service	2,034,500
State nurses	140,000
Laboratory, clerical, etc.	238,800
	$4,515,800
School medical assistance program (September, 1952, to August, 1953)	$95,000

4. Local school district costs in connection with the services enumerated are estimated at $3,000,000.

B. With respect to the effectiveness of the present school health program, the following shortcomings stand out:

1. The present program places undue emphasis on a periodic, regularly scheduled medical examination. These examinations do not provide an adequate or economic health inventory because:

a. The periodicity of examination is too rigidly prescribed to take into account variations in health needs among children.

b. Searching for defects of low correction value consumes a disproportionate fraction of the examination time.

c. No use is made of such significant information as that provided by an appropriate medical history, attendance records, and records of development and scholastic achievement.

d. Examination procedure does not permit the most economic division of labor among physicians, nurses, and technicians.

2. The program places undue emphasis upon diagnosis, and the level of corrections is low, partially due to inadequate follow-up.

3. The program calls for biennial dental examinations though it is known that approximately nine out of every ten pupils have dental defects. Hence, the program involves the expenditure of funds to re-establish a known fact. Any educational purpose the dental program may serve could be achieved in a less costly manner.

C. The reporting system for the school health program lacks uniformity and internal consistency and fails to provide data necessary for computation of significant correction rates by defects. Such rates are essential to a thorough evaluation of the program.

III. The provisions of the School Code relating to biennial medical and dental examinations (Article XIV, Sections 1401 to 1413, inclusive) and other provisions of the code relating to health (Sections 1421 to 1438, inclusive) have resulted in a school health program which is neither functionally nor administratively integrated. For example, the biennial medical and dental examinations are given under the supervision of the Department of Health, but the sight and hearing tests are under the administrative jurisdiction of the Department of Public Instruction.

Section 1422 of the School Code provides: "Medical examiners of the several school districts shall make sight and hearing tests of the pupils . . . at least once in each school year. [Emphasis supplied.] Such tests for hearing shall be made with audiometers or with other scientific devices, approved and provided by the Department of Public Instruction. The Department of Public Instruction shall prescribe to . . . medical examiners . . . suitable rules of instructions as to the tests and examinations to be made . . ."

According to the records of the Department of Public Instruction, 710,583 children were given audiometric examinations during the school year 1953-54. In that year, there were 1,642,369 pupils in average daily membership in the public schools. In other words, 57 percent of the pupils in the schools were not given the hearing test.

RECOMMENDATION

It is recommended that the Commonwealth establish an integrated school health program under the administrative supervision of the Secretary of Health, with adequate supervisory personnel at the local level.

I. With respect to pupils, the health program should provide for a continuing health inventory of every school child.

Scheduled Health Appraisal.—A complete appraisal of the child's health should be made at three times—upon his entry into the school system and at about the time he attains age eleven and age fifteen. These scheduled health appraisals should be based upon information derived from:

1. An appropriate health questionnaire.
2. A thorough physical examination.
3. Specified tests and measurements.
4. Attendance and achievement records.

Tests and Measurements.—The following tests and measurements should be given each child at the stated intervals.

1. A vision test, given annually by a nurse, technician, or teacher.

2. A hearing test, employing an audiometer, given at least once every two years by a nurse, technician, or teacher.

3. Measurement of height and weight at least once annually by either a nurse or a teacher.

4. A chest X-ray, given by a medical technician, at approximately age fourteen.

The results of these tests and measurements should be available to the examining physician at the time of the scheduled physical examination.

Interim Health Appraisal.—Provision should be made for interim health appraisal in the periods between regularly scheduled health appraisals, consisting of the above enumerated tests and measurements; nurse or teacher observation of the child's physical and mental condition, attendance, and achievement records; and, when warranted, special physical examination and associated laboratory tests, which may be authorized by the nurse or physician.

Dental Examination.—A dental examination should be given to the child upon entrance into the school system, provided he has not had a dental inspection within the previous four months.

Private Examinations.—Any medical or dental examination, given by a licensed practitioner, made within a period of four months prior to the date of the regularly offered school examination, reported on authorized forms, and paid for at private expense, should be admissible in place of the school examination.

Parental Responsibility.—Parents should be urged to be present at the physical examinations and encouraged to inform school authorities within a reasonable period of time as to the steps, if any, taken to correct any defect found in the course of the medical examination.

II. With respect to school personnel, the health program should provide for:

A. A comprehensive pre-employment examination.

B. Biennial chest X-rays provided by the school district.

III. With respect to health personnel:

A. It should be made mandatory upon all school districts to employ—singly or jointly with other districts—school nurses.

B. Medical examiners should be compensated on the basis of time spent in performing health duties.

C. Medical examiners should be relieved of their duties with regard to sanitary inspection, which should be performed by qualified sanitarians.

IV. With respect to financing:

A. The current arrangement between the Commonwealth and school districts for financing nursing service should be retained.

B. Commonwealth reimbursement with respect to costs incurred in furnishing other services under the program should be made available to local districts on a per-pupil (in average daily membership) basis.

V. With respect to records and forms: To facilitate constant re-evaluation of the entire health program. all records and forms should provide for:

A. Clearly defined, unambiguous terms.

B. A consistent defect classification on all forms used.

C. A defect classification which segregates defects according to degree of severity.

D. Paired defects and corrections for identical groups and specified time periods.

E. A means of distinguishing between:

1. Newly discovered defects and those present in a prior examination.

2. Corrections which follow treatment and those which occur without treatment.

F. A means of recording noncorrections due to removal of the child from the school system and disagreement between family physician and school physician.

PART I

CHILD HEALTH SERVICES: A REVIEW

A variety of child health programs is operated within the Commonwealth. For convenience of reference, it is helpful to differentiate between Commonwealth-furnished (with or without federal aid) services and Commonwealth-mandated services. Again, in connection with mandated services, one must distinguish between services in which the Commonwealth participates on either the financial or the administrative level and services in which the Commonwealth does not so participate.

As a matter of institutional practice, services are usually combined into programs. Within a single program may be found both services mandated and financed by the Commonwealth and services mandated but not financed by the Commonwealth.

COMMONWEALTH-FURNISHED SERVICES AND FACILITIES

The Commonwealth furnishes both diagnostic and treatment services to children for tuberculosis, orthopedic conditions, congenital heart disease, mental health problems, and cleft palate, and diagnositc services for rheumatic fever and rheumatic heart.

Children constitute a small fraction of the patient population in the 98 tuberculosis clinics maintained by the Commonwealth. However, the major expenditure of the Bureau of Tuberculosis Control, Department of Health, on behalf of children is for the maintenance of the children's wing at Mont Alto Sanatorium, which is open to children from all parts of the state. In recent years, the children's wing has accommodated, on the average, 120 patients annually at an approximate annual cost to the Commonwealth of $248,000.

Children from all parts of the state except Philadelphia and Pittsburgh are eligible for diagnosis in the state clinic and treatment under the program of the Crippled Children's Division of the Department of Health. During recent years, approximately 5,350 children per year have been examined and over 2,000 per year have received treatment. The program is financed entirely from federal funds. The Commonwealth-operated-and-financed Crippled Children's Hospital at Elizabethtown, open to children from all parts of the state, has an average of 120 resident patients and an annual operating cost of approximately $625,000.

Children from all parts of the state except Philadelphia and Pittsburgh are eligible for referral to the state rheumatic fever clinics for evaluation. During the recent past, approximately 1,840 children annually have been referred to the clinics by school district personnel, hospitals, and private physicians. Total cost of the program to the Commonwealth (including some treatment for congenital heart disease) is about $94,000 annually.

Children from all parts of the Commonwealth are eligible for the services provided by the Cleft Palate Division of the Department of Health. Approximately 985 children receive these services annually, at an approximate total annual expenditure of $160,000 from Commonwealth and federal funds.

On the average, 130 children are resident patients at the State Mental Hospital in Allentown (open to children from all parts of the state); the average total annual cost to the Commonwealth for these patients is $84,000. In the federal fiscal year July 1, 1953, to June 30, 1954, ten child guidince clinics for children with emotional and behavior problems and seven guidance clinics whose patients include both children and adults were operated at a cost of $897,000. Fourteen per cent of this amount was contributed by the Commonwealth, 12 percent by the federal government, and 74 percent from municipal, county, and private funds.

In addition to children who receive care in state-aided general and children's hospitals, some 5,000 children annually receive care in the ten Commonwealth-owned-and-operated general hospitals.

All of these programs, except that providing care for children with tuberculosis and those providing diagnostic services to children for rheumatic fever and crippling ailments, call for an evaluation of the economic position of the parents or guardians of the children involved. In some instances, the parents or guardians assume a portion of the cost. The services are provided entirely without charge only to those children who parents or guardians are administratively judged to be unable to afford the service.

COMMONWEALTH-MANDATED SERVICES AND FACILITIES

Numerous statutory mandates relating to health services and facilities are imposed by the Commonwealth upon the approximately 2,400 local school districts within the Commonwealth. The mandates relate to: (1) prevention of the spread of contagious disease; (2) sanitary facilities and sanitary inspection; (3) annual sight and hearing tests; (4) biennial school health examinations; and (5) nursing services.

Prevention of the Spread of Contagious Disease.—Section 1421 of the School Code provides that "every school district of the first, second, and third class shall . . . annually appoint medical examiners, whose duties shall include the vaccination of children of indigent parents, official revaccination of children having temporary vaccination certificates, physical examination of children incident to the issuance of employment certificates, as required by the provisions of the Child Labor Act, conducting routine classroom inspections incident to the control of contagious diseases, approve the return of pupils who have been absent due to a contagious disease, or suspected contagious disease . . . They shall annually make a sanitary survey of the building and grounds." In fourth class school districts,[1] the above enumerated duties, with the exception of the sanitary survey (see below), are performed by medical examiners appointed by the Secretary of Health and are paid for out of Commonwealth funds at the rate of $.75 per vaccination and $1.00 per employment examination.

Sanitary Facilities and Sanitary Inspection.—The School Code establishes standards for building construction, heating and ventilating devices, and toilet facilities of schools.[2] In addition, Section 1435 of the code provides that "The medical examiner in first, second and third class districts, shall, at least once each year . . . make a careful examination of all privies, water-closets, urinals, cellars, the water supply, and drinking vessels and utensials . . ." In school districts of the fourth class, comparable examinations are to be made by sanitary officers appointed by the Secretary of Health.

Annual Sight and Hearing Tests.—Section 1422 of the School Code provides that "Medical examiners of the several school districts shall make sight and hearing tests of the pupils in such schools at least once in each school year. [Emhasis supplied.] Such tests for hearings shall be made with audiometers or with other scientific devices, approved and provided by the Department of Public Instruction, for use in the various school districts. The Department of Public Instruction shall prescribe to the board of school directors and medical examiners of schools, [emphasis supplied] suitable rules of instructions as to the tests and examinations to be made . . ."

Table 1 shows, for the school years 1949-50 through 1953-54, the average daily membership of the public schools and the number and percent of children who received audiometric examinations. In each of the years, less than half the pupils in average daily membership were given the hearing tests which under the law are to be given annually to all pupils.

Reports on visual screening tests are made to the Department of Public Instruction only for those pupils in fourth class school districts and third class districts under the county superintendent. Such data as are available indicate that only a fraction of the average daily membership receive the sight tests required by law to be given annually.

Although the School Code makes it mandatory upon local school boards to provide annual hearing and vision tests, the Commonwealth makes no specific reimbursement on account of local costs incurred in connection with the giving of the tests.

Biennial School Health Examinations.—The school health examination program is administered jointly by local school districts and the state departments of Health and Public Instruction. In view of its position as a comparatively new program and the fact that it costs more on the state level than all other health programs combined, the school health examination program will be dealt with separately and in detail in Part II of this report.

Nursing Services.—In addition to assisting in the school health examinations, school nurses render certain health services to children in the interim between the regularly scheduled examinations. School nursing services are discussed in the detailed description of the contemporary school health examinations which follows.

It may be noted that the Department of Public Assistance, through the School Medical Assistance Program, provides finances for certain corrective measures.

PART II

CONTEMPORARY SCHOOL HEALTH EXAMINATIONS

The most costly child health services in the Commonwealth are the biennial medical and dental examinations and related nursing services. The School Health Act of 1945,[1] subsequently incorporated in the Public School Code of 1949,[2] which provides for the biennial medical and dental examinations, applies to all pupils in public and private schools and all professional and nonprofessional employes of these institutions.

COST OF THE PROGRAM

The General Assembly of 1953 appropriated $9,840,000 for the school health program for the biennium 1953-55.

Expenditures for the school health program, by category, for the school year 1952-53, were as follows:

Medical examinations	$1,473,000
Dental examinations	629,500
School nursing service	2,034,500
State nurses	140,000
Laboratory, clerical, etc.	238,800
Total	$4,515,800

Local costs incurred in connection with the examinations can only be approximated. Generally, the most important local cost item is represented by the difference

[1] Pennsylvania school districts are classified as follows:
First class—population 1,500,000 or greater (In the school year 1953-54, Philadelphia, the only district in this class, had an average daily membership of 223,154)
First class A—population 500,000 but less than 1,500,000 (Pittsburgh, 1953-54 a.d.m. 69,858)
Second class—population 30,000 but less than 500,000 (1953-54 total a.d.m. 211,345)
Third class—population 5,000 but less than 30,000 (1953-54 total a.d.m. 596,860)
Fourth class—population less than 5,000 (1953-54 total a.d.m. 541,152).

between the state subsidy on account of employment of a nurse and the nurse's salary. In addition, districts of the first, second, and third classes, unlike fourth class districts, must furnish their own clerical assistance, and all districts must provide "health rooms, clinics or rooms set aside for this special purpose [medical and dental examination] that are equipped with the necessary accessories to insure privacy, adequate heat and light." (The School Code, Section 1403.) It is difficult to price the sum total of these services. However, it appears that state plus local costs of the school health program for the school year 1952-53 were approximately $7,500,000.

THE EXAMINATION PROGRAM

Biennial medical and dental examination of all pupils is required under Section 1402 of the School Code, subject to the condition imposed by Section 1404 that "The rate of medical examination shall not be in excess of four children . . . per hour. The rate of dental examinations shall not be in excess of eight children per hour." The examinations must be made by registered practitioners and are paid for by the Commonwealth at the rate of $1.50 per medical examination and $1.75 per dental examination. In first, second, and third class school districts, examiners are appointed by the district authorities and payments are made by the Commonwealth to the districts, which in turn pay the examiners in accordance with such terms as may be agreed upon by the district and the examiner. In fourth class districts, medical and dental examiners are appointed by the Secretary of Health on recommendation of the district medical health officer, the district dental officer, and the county medical officer, and Commonwealth payments are made directly to the examiners.

In addition, regulations of the Department of Health provide that in fourth class districts the Secretary of Health may (through the Nursing Bureau) appoint so-called "medical assistants" to perform such clerical tasks as the completion of forms and the mailing of notices. The fee paid medical assistants is $.50 per medical examination, not to exceed four examinations per hour.

Section 1429 of the School Code provides: "Any board of school directors, or boards of school directors jointly, shall employ one or more school nurses, and shall define their duties." If a board of school directors employs a nurse, she must be paid at least the minimum compensation established for professional employes by the School Code. A district employing a nurse is reimbursed by the Commonwealth on an equalization basis—that is, a school district employing a nurse for 1,500 or more pupils is entitled to Commonwealth reimbursement calculated by multiplying the statutory equalization level by the district's standard reimbursement fraction. In the event that a nurse is employed for less than 1,500 pupils, the product so obtained is multiplied by the ratio: number of pupils under the nurse's care divided by 1,500. In other words, the extent of Commonwealth reimbursement depends upon the relationship between a district's need for services and its capacity to pay for such services.

Generally, a school district which does not employ a nurse so informs the county superintendent, who in turn advises the Nursing Bureau of the Department of Health, which assigns a state nurse to furnish services that in other districts are performed by district employes. In the School District of Pittsburgh, nurses employed by the municipality provide most of the nursing services in connection with school health examinations.

It is the task of the physicians, dentists, nurses, and so-called "medical assistants" to examine pupils and school personnel biennially and record the results of the examinations. Both pupils and school employes, under authority of Section 1409 of the School Code, may elect to have the examination performed by examiners of their own choice and at their own expense.

The statute does not detail the objectives to be attained by the mandated biennial examinations. The law merely states that the examinations shall be complete and "shall include X-rays and such other examinations that may be deemed necessary by the medical or dental examiners." (Section 1403.) Further, the law states: "In making examinations and advising the parent and family physician the medical examiners shall give special attention to symptoms of rheumatic fever and all other diseases of childhood." (Section 1406.)

However, Section 1407, though it relates to the keeping of permanent records, suggests broad objectives and indicates the scope of the examinations as follows:

It is the intent and legislative purpose of this subdivision of this article that a complete and permanent medical and dental record be established and maintained in order to assist in building sound minds and healthy bodies for the youth of Pennsylvania. [Emphasis supplied.] The records established hereunder may, among others, include a record of tuberculosis, blood analysis, urinalysis and necessary X-rays, and such other records as the Department of Health in conjunction with the Advisory Health Board may deem necessary.

EVALUATION OF THE EXAMINATION PROGRAM[3]

Biennial school health examinations have been given in Pennsylvania since 1946. Examination of the records, defective as they are, suggests strongly that, by and large, the program has not been effective. Generally speaking, no systematic attempt has been made to search for the symptoms of rheumatic fever; X-rays and other tests authorized by the School Code apparently have not been utilized to the extent warranted. The routine medical and dental examinations have been over-emphasized. And, the medical examinations and associated tests that have been given provide a less effective periodic health inventory than can be provided at the same cost.

It is the judgment of the Medical Advisory Panel that routine biennial physical examinations are not warranted in a well-rounded school health program. If a portion of the funds now devoted to biennial examinations were spent in other ways, the health level of the school population would be materially improved.

In addition to the fact that the routine physical examination has been offered too frequently, the examination and associated tests are not efficient. Among the elements making for inefficiency are an inadequate medical history, obsolete diagnostic techniques, and uneconomic division of labor among physicians, nurses, and technicians.

The medical history which parents are now asked to complete is essentially a check list of various ailments that the child or his parents might have had. The medical terminology used is likely to be unfamiliar to the parents and the information provided by such a check list—even if appropriately completed—is of less value than is other information that might be obtained. It is the judgment of the Medical Avisory Panel that a medical history can be devised that will be useful in detecting a number of different ailments including allergies, epilepsy, diabetes, infected tonsils, rheumatic fever, mental illness, and orthopedic defects.[4]

Present administrative regulations require the physician to obtain certain facts in the examination that could as effectively be obtained by nurses or technicians at less cost.

In addition, the list of defects for which an inspection is made includes some that are either incurable or have low values associated with their cures and does not include some that can be detected by a screening examination and that have relatively high values associated with their correction.

With respect to the dental examinations, it may be noted that practitioners have pointed out from time to time that the incidence of dental decay among school children is high. For example, testifying before the President's Commission on the Health Needs of the Nation in 1952, Dr. Max Seham, a pediatrician of Minneapolis, Minnesota, observed: "Dental decay, as you have heard from Dr. Jordan [Dr. W. A. Jordan, chairman of the Dental Health Education Committee of the Minnesota State Dental Association], is another major health problem. It is estimated that the rate of development of cavities is five times as great as the number filled. Between 75 and 90 percent of all school children have dental defects and caries."[5] Again, in 1951, the U. S. Department of Health, Education, and Welfare noted: "Over 95 percent of school-age children are affected with dental caries."[6]

In view of the fact that about nine out of every ten school children apparently suffer from dental defects, it appears to be a waste of resources to re-establish this fact by examining every pupil biennially at an expense to the taxpayer of approximately $600,000 per year. What is needed is not re-establishment of a known fact, but a method of getting pupils to the dentist for treatment.

SCHOOL HEALTH REPORTING

Evaluation of any program is difficult, if not impossible, unless consistent, meaningful reports are produced as part of the program.

The detailed school health records and reports maintained by the districts or filed with the Commonwealth are prescribed or approved by the Department of Health and the Department of Public Instruction. The records prepared in fourth class districts differ somewhat from those prepared in third, second, and first class districts.

Fourth Class School Districts.—In addition to such optional forms as may be prepared for local use, three mandatory forms are prepared in fourth class districts:

1. An individual Pupil's Health Record (Exhibit A),[7] which shows a pupil's height, weight, medical history, immunizations and tests, and defects discovered in consequence of examination
2. A Weekly Progress Report (Exhibit B), which is compiled from the pupil's health record forms and forwarded to the School Division of the state Department of Health; the weekly reports, in turn, are used by the state office to compile an annual summary of findings from examinations in fourth class school districts (Exhibit C)
3. A School Nurse Annual Service Report (Exhibit D), which is forwarded to the Department of Public Instruction. In school districts which do not employ nurses, a Field Nurse's Monthly Report (Exhibit E) is completed by a state nurse and filed with the Department of Health.

Third, Second, and First Class School Districts—These districts generally utilize the forms described above, but submit to the state office (in lieu of the weekly progress report, which is used in these districts only on the local level) the Annual Report of Medical Examinations (Exhibit C).

A few districts, including Philadelphia, use a pupil health record form which differs somewhat from the state form.

Because Philadelphia employs a defect classification which cannot be readily converted to the state classification, the annual summary submitted by Philadelphia is less complete than those prepared for other school districts.

EVALUATION OF THE REPORTING SYSTEM

The purpose of records and reports on the school health examinations is to provide information that can be of use to a policy-making or administrative body such as the General Assembly, the Department of Health, or the local school district. If the facts that are collected are not to be used by some policy-making or administrative body, they should not be reported. And, if facts are to be reported, their classification should be such that the most information can be obtained from them at a given cost.

Perusal of the forms shows that the contemporary reporting system fails to define terms clearly and does not employ a consistent classification among forms. For example, instruction 18 on the reverse side of Exhibit B (Weekly Progress Report) may be alternatively interpreted to mean that entries in the column marked "Def." (defects) should include all cases of remediable defects discovered in the current and prior examinations or to mean that only defects first discovered in the current examination should be included. Again, instruction 18 continues: "In the column marked 'Cor.' note all corrections that have been made since the last examination." Some local examiners interpret this to mean that only corrections of defects found in the course of school examinations are to be entered, whereas other examiners proceed on the assumption that all corrections, regardless of how the defects are discovered, are to be included.

[4] Such a history has been developed for adults by Cornell University Medical College under a contract, recommended by the National Research Council, between the Veterans Administration and Cornell University. As regards the efficiency of this questionnaire, it is reported that "The interpreters of the CMI (Cornell Medical Index) identified almost all (94 percent) of the diagnostic categories in which disease was found in hospital investigation. In addition, physicians could often infer (in 87 percent of these categories) what specific diseases were present." (See Cornell Medical Index Health Questionnaire Manual, Revised 1953, [New York City: Cornell University Medical College], p. 5.)

[7] The exhibits will be found at the end of the report.

The defect classification on the summary sheet is inconsistent with the classification on the weekly progress report. For example, the summary sheet lists "ear defects" and "hearing defects," while the weekly progress report does not list hearing defects separately.

Though the weekly progress report (Exhibit B) may, on first inspection, convey the impression that it pairs significant defect and correction observations, this impression proves erroneous because: (1) A correction reported at a given date may relate to a defect first discovered at the last school examination, at some prior school examination, or by a private physician since the last school examination; (2) the membership of the groups examined at successive biennial examinations does not remain constant because of acceleration, retardation, migration, or death.

In addition, there is serious doubt regarding the comparability of annual summary reports prepared by the Department of Health from the weekly progress reports of fourth class districts and annual summary reports prepared by third, second, and first class districts, because the latter districts are given no instructions for preparing the annual summary form and there is no assurance that the methods employed in summarizing the data are uniform among the districts or comparable to the methods used in the state office.

RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN REMEDIABLE DEFECTS AND CORRECTIONS: AN ILLUSTRATION

During the school year 1952-53, medical examinations were given 959,336 pupils enrolled in public and private schools. Of this total, 330,383 were reported to have remediable defects.

In view of the deficiencies of the reporting system currently used in connection with school health examinations, no significant relationship can be established for the state as a whole between discoveries and corrections of given types of remediable defects. However, an attempt has been made to establish such relationships for the School Distric of Philadelphia. Though the School District of Philadelphia accounts for 15 percent of the total public school enrollment in the Commonwealth, the relationships which obtain between the discovery of remediable defects and the corresponding correction rates may not be typical for Pennsylvania as a whole.

Table 2 shows the number of defects, by defect class, found present by the medical examiners in the public schools of Philadelphia during the school year 1951-52 and the percentages of these defects reported treated or untreated for specified reasons during the period 1951-52 through 1953-54.

The table should be read as follows: Of the 12,503 remediable defects of the eye reported in 1951-52, 36.10 percent were reported treated during that school year, 25.58 percent during the succeeding year, and 8.13 percent during 1953-54. In .38 percent of the eye-defect cases, the childs' physician considered the defect incurable and in 11.16 percent the attending physician otherwise disagreed with the diagnosis or felt immediate treatment was undesirable; 2.11 percent of the defects were associated with children who either died or left the Philadelphia public schools; and in 2:10 percent of the cases, defects were not treated but were not found present at a later examination. As of June, 1954, the residual 14.44 percent of eye defects remained without benefit of treatment. Comparable information for other types of defects is presented in the other rows of the table.

The frequency with which treatment followed discovery of defects varied widely among types of defects. For example, 69.81 percent of the eye defects reported during the school year 1951-52 had been treated in that and the two succeeding school years, whereas, of the hernias reported in 1951-52, only 20.17 percent were treated during the same period. Again, examination of column 8 shows that in 4.39 percent of all cases that attending physician felt immediate treatment was undesirable or otherwise disagreed with the diagnosis. The frequency of such disagreement varied among defects, ranging from .27 percent of nutritional defects, to 36.17 percent of chest defects.

COMMONWEALTH FINANCIAL AID TO CHILDREN REQUIRING DIAGNOSIS OR CLINICAL TREATMENT

Section 1406 of the School Code directs that "Recommendations as to medical, surgical or dental care shall be sent to each parent or guardian, as the case may be, on forms prepared by the Department of Health with instructions to consult the family physician or dentist."

When the parents of a child are unable to provide recommended treatment and the institutional care or special services outlined in Part I of this report are not applicable, payments under the School Medical Assistance Program may be made if the eligibility requirements of the Department of Public Assistance relating to the economic position of the child's family are met. While the evaluation of economic position in connection with eligibility for the special services of the Department of Health is flexible and involves the application of considerable administrative discretion, the Department of Public Assistance determines eligibility by reference to fixed standards relating to property holdings, income, and cost of medical services involved.

The number of children aided and the amount paid by the Department of Public Assistance during the biennium 1949-51 (the latest for which detailed figures are available), classified by type of defect, are shown below.

Average payments ranged from $10.47 for eye conditions to $82.28 for herniotomy, with an over-all average per child treated of $23.91. Though breakdowns of the total figure for biennia since 1949-1951 are not available, it should be noted that the total cost for the biennium 1951-53 was $188.258.

PART III

A NEW APPROACH TO THE SCHOOL HEALTH PROGRAM

The purposes of a school health program should include the improvement of the health level of children of school age and the establishments of habits that will tend to produce a higher level of physical and mental well-being for the pupil during and after his school life.

Though, generally speaking, "health" is an elusive term, changes in health level of the school population can be approximated—provided adequate and accurate records are kept—in terms of frequency and severity of illness, rates of physical development, and levels of scholastic achievement.

If the resources devoted to a health program are to be efficiently utilized, the program must be developed in full recognition of the following facts: (1) Over the years the healing arts have undergone considerable specialization. That is to say, the tasks formerly performed by the physician alone are now performed by physicians with the co-operation of nurses and specialized technicians, with the aid of specialized equipment, and by reference to continually developing diagnostic and clinical techniques. (2) The incidence of some diseases varies with age, and enough is known about the association to specify the approximate age at which a given disease is most likely to occur. (3) The values commonly associated with the correction of defects show marked variations. It is generally agreed, for example, that the correction of a remediable heart defect is more essential than correction of minor skin blemishes. (4) Remediable defects occur in different combinations in different individuals. (5) Some defects, once discovered, need not be looked for again.

The functional specialization in the healing arts is accompanied by differentiation in the compensation commonly received by different specialists. For example, ordinarily the compensation of a nurse is less than that of a physician. Hence, if resources are to be conserved, anything that can be done competently by a nurse should be done by a nurse. Similarly, the compensation of a dental hygienist is commonly less than that of a dentist. Hence, whatever can be done competently by a dental hygienist should be done by a hygienist. Further, it is uneconomical to have a physician perform tasks which can be performed with equal competency and less expensively by medical technicians.

Modern diagnostic methods are not confined to physical examination by physicians and dentists, but employ such devices as chemical examination of blood and urine, X-rays of critical organs, mechanical hearing and vision tests, height and weight measurements, and medical histories.

Generally speaking, at a given time and at given prices, health personnel, equipment, and techniques should be combined in such a manner as to bring about the greatest improvement in health for a given expenditure.

Because of the different rates at which discoverable defects occur at various ages and the values associated with the correction of different defects, and of the same defect at different stages, it is uneconomical to examine for all defects at identical, fixed time intervals. For example, changes in vision may occur relatively rapidly among children of school age. Furthermore, impaired vision is a major deterrent to the educational and personality development of the child. Consequently, vision tests should be made more frequently than, say, inspections for flat feet—a defect which changes rather slowly over time and which may not have a high correction value.

AN EFFICIENT PATTERN OF HEALTH APPRAISALS FOR PUPILS

The precise content of the medical appraisal should depend upon the health requirements of the child, taken in conjunction with available resources. The major comonents of the health appraisal are: (1) the physical examination, (2) the medical history, (3) specified tests and measurements, and (4) attendance and achievement records. Each component should be constructed to permit evaluation of the following major characteristics of the child: (1) his development, (2) his physical condition, (3) his mental and emotional status and family adjustment, and (4) his speech. Detailed procedures for evaluating these characteristics—insofar as they can be specified—should be administratively determined by the Commonwealth's Department of Health.

Medical and Dental Examinations.—The Medical Advisory Panel recommends that an adequate school health program for Pennsylvania at the present time include three scheduled medical examinations and one scheduled dental examination during the school life of a child. The scheduled medical examination should be given on entry into the school system—that is, typically, at age six—and again at approximately ages eleven and fifteen. The dental examination should be given only on entry of the pupil into the system and only to those children who have not been examined by a dentist within a period of four months prior to entrance into the school system. The examination should serve primarily to alleviate a child's fear of exposure to dental treatment.

Records, Tests, and Measurements.—The following records for each child should be available to the physician at the time of the scheduled physical examination: (1) records of absences (duration and cause), (2) teacher's observation, (3) results of intelligence tests, (4) scholastic achievement records, and (5) the health questionnaire (completed by the parent until such time as the child is capable of meaningfully answering relevant questions).

The following tests and measurements should be made of each child at the stated intervals and the results made available to the physician at the time of the scheduled medical examination:

1. A vision test given annually by a nurse, teacher, or technician
2. A hearing test, employing an audiometer, given at least once every two years by a nurse, teacher, or technician
3. Measurement of height and weight at least once annually by a nurse or teacher
4. A chest X-ray, given by a medical technician, when the child is about 14 years of age.

Interim Examination.—A balanced health program must provide for interim examinations. The incidence of disease can be anticipated realistically for children as a group but cannot be accurately predicted for the individual child. Thus, interim examinations permit adapting the program to the needs of the individual child (with respect to both number and timing of examinations) without increasing the over-all expenditure.

It should be mandatory upon all classroom teachers to report to the school nurse or physician unusual behavior or appearance of a pupil. Upon inspection of the teacher's report, the nurse or physician, should, if in his or her judgment such a course is warranted, refer the pupil for special physical examination and associated laboratory tests.

Participation of Parents and Family Physician.—Increased effort should be made to encourage parents to be present at the physical examination. Parental participation is important to formation of good health habits in the child and essential to provision of necessary corrective treatment. Parents and the family physician should be advised in writing of the findings of the school medical examiner. Parents should be encouraged to inform the school authorities within a reasonable period of time as to the steps, if any, taken to correct any defect found in the course of the medical examination.

Follow-up.—In the event that no corrective action is taken by the parents, the nurse should call on the parents and explain the findings of the medical examiner and the possible consequences, from a health point of view, of the parents' failure to provide for proper demical treatment.

Family Physicians and Dentists.—Under existing law, the parents of pupils have the privilege of substituting examination by the family physician or dentist for examination by school examiners. However, the evidence suggests that this privilege has not been sufficiently publicized. Considerable gain can be made if the family physician or dentist who, in any case, will have to administer treatment, makes the initial diagnosis. Steps should be taken to clearly inform parents and children that an examination may be taken outside the school system. Any examination meeting the requirements of the district's school examination, made within a period of four months prior to the date of the regularly offered school examination and reported on a form prescribed by the Department of Health, should be admissible in lieu of the school examination.

Re-admission of Pupils after Recovery from a Contagious Disease.—The provision of the school Code which makes it mandatory upon medical examiners to approve the return to class of pupils who have suffered from a contagious disease[1] appears unnecessary in the light of current medical procedure. The Medical Advisory Panel recommends that the Secretary of Health be given authority to develop and prescribe procedures for re-admission in all cases of contagious disease or other conditions presenting health hazards.

Physicians and Dentists Qualified to Give Examinations.—Medical and dental examinations given by the school or substituted in lieu of the regularly scheduled school examinations should be given by practitioners legally qualified to practice in the Commonwealth.

Health Appraisals of School Personnel.—If the health level of pupils is to be improved, the health of teaching and other personnel must be properly safeguarded. Safeguards are essential because the pupil is in close physical contact with school personnel and hence may readily contact contagious diseases such as tuberculosis, and because children are relatively susceptible to injurious influences that result from frequent exposure to psychoneurotic personalities.

Currently, health examinations of school employes are governed by the School Code, the Vehicle Code, and the health laws. Under the School Code, all school employes must take biennial medical and dental examinations. Under the health laws, food handlers employed by the schools must satisfy certain requirements. Under the Vehicle Code, a school bus driver must give evidence that he has "satisfactorily passed a physical examination to be given annually at the beginning of every school year by the physician for the school district by which he is employed."

It is suggested that the present procedure of requiring all school employes to submit to biennial medical and dental examinations be discontinued. The school district should require a thorough pre-employment examination of all employes, and all employes should be given a chest X-ray every second year. It is not suggested that the additional special provisions applying to food handlers and school bus drivers be altered.

Sanitary Inspection.—At present, medical examiners in first, second, and third class districts are required to make sanitary inspections of school plant. The ends of both economy and efficiency would be served if this task was assigned to qualified sanitarians.

THE FINANCING OF THE PROGRAM

As has been pointed out in Part II, contemporary health services are financed in a variety of ways. To briefly recapitulate: (1) It is mandatory upon first, second, and third class school districts to employ their own medical examiners and to compensate them out of their own resources in accordance with terms agreed upon by examiners and boards; these districts are reimbursed by the Commonwealth for the biennial medical and dental examinations at the rate of $1.50 per medical examination and $.75 per dental examination. (2) In fourth class districts, medical and dental examiners are appointed by the Secretary of Health and paid out of Commonwealth funds at the rate of $1.50 per medical examination, $1.00 per employment examination, and $.75 per dental examination and per vaccination. (3) All school districts, regardless of classification, which employ school nurses (who must be paid at least the minimum salary mandated for professional employes by the School Code) are reimbursed by the Commonwealth for nursing service on an equalization basis.

In other words, the Commonwealth pays in full for some health services and partially reimburses for others. In the case of nursing service, the extent of Commonwealth participation depends upon the relationship between a district's need for services and its capacity to pay for these services.[2]

The new approach to the school health problem outlined above can be fitted to a variety of levels of total expenditure and varying degrees of Commonwealth financial participation. If total expenditures per pupil were continued at the present level, the additional services provided for under the new program—such as interim examinations, additional nursing services, and chest X-rays —could be paid for from savings occasioned by reducing the number of scheduled medical and dental examinations.

[1] Section 1421.

[2] For a detailed discussion of equalization reimbursement procedure, see State and Local Support of Public Education, A Report of the Joint State Government Commission to the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, Session of 1953 (Harrisburg, Pa.: 1953).

It is suggested that the current arrangement between the Commonwealth and school districts with respect to the financing of nursing service be retained.

With regard to the other services provided by the program, such as scheduled medical and dental examinations, special examinations, and X-rays, it is recommended that the Comonwealth make it mandatory upon local districts to furnish these services under the administrative supervision of the Secretary of Health and that local districts be reimbursed on a per-pupil (in average daily membership) basis for the costs incurred.

Arrangements which call for compensating examiners on the basis of a fixed rate per examination make for undesirable rigidity. Medical practice indicates that different patients, suffering from different combinations of ailments or suspected of having different types of disease, vary considerably in their requirements for the physician's, nurse's, or technician's time and attention. The present method of compensating medical examiners fails to take cognizance of this fact. The proposed school health program emphasizes components other than scheduled medical examinations, and local school districts should compensate medical examiners on the basis of total time devoted to school health work. In view of the strides that have been made toward the enlargement of attendance areas in the Commonwealth since the establishment of the present school health program in 1945, compensation on the basis of time devoted to school health work is administratively feasible.[3]

ADMINISTRATION OF THE PROGRAM

The exclusive responsibility for administering the program should rest in the Secretary of Health. The Secretary should be responsible for:

(1) Specification of forms, records, and reports.
(2) Determination of the qualifications to be met by all health personnel participating in the school health program.
(3) Approval of all Commonwealth payments made in connection with the school health program.
(4) Specification of standards and procedures in examination, testing, and other parts of the program in accordance with best medical practice.
(5) Adequate supervision of the program at the local level.

STATISTICAL REPORTS

The School Health Act has a two fold purpose:

1. The finding of correctable defects.
2. The proper reporting of these defects in order that we may have a true statistical picture of the physical status of the school population.

It is important, therefore, that the weekly or annual reports be carefully completed and that close attention be given to the tabulation of these defects.

Defects which need further study or those definitely shown at the time of examination to be correctable and which have been reported to the parent on form 13047 (Notice to Parent Following Examination) are the only defects which should be recorded in this report as remediable.

By this means we will be able to prepare accurate statistics to give to the County Superintendent and others responsible for carrying out the intent of the legislation aiding in the correction of defects. In order that the statistics may be accurate as possible, may we ask you to cooperate. If these statistics are properly submitted and your good judgment is used in the proper tabulation of the findings, we feel that we will have a better statistical picture of the actual physical conditions of the school population.

While the reporting of defects on the Weekly Progress Report covers only those cases dealt with in the above instructions, it is still important that any other abnormal conditions not deemed correctable should also be noted on the pupils health record card even though they are not included in the Weekly Progress Report.

S. J. DICKEY, M.D.,
Epidemiologist and Medical Consultant.

USE OF FORM 13095 (APPLIES TO FOURTH CLASS DISTRICTS)

1. All Weekly Progress Reports must have the doctor's name recorded at the top.
2. Have the clerk sign the report in the lower right hand corner with her title for identification.
3. In the column "Day of Week" opposite the day worked, record the month and day.
4. The Weekly Progress report must be totaled, even if there is only one days work recorded, as this indicates to us that the week is completed.
5. Do not use zeros or dashes in blank columns as they are confused with figures.
6. The column "Pupils Normal" should include only those pupils who are found to be free of any defect whatever.
7. The column "Pupils with Remediable Defects" should include only those cases where form 13047 (Notice to Parent Following Examination) is used.
8. The column "Pupils with Non-Correctable Defects" should include all cases which have defects that cannot be corrected. Include all cases where the best possible correction has been made by the use of mechanical or other means. In the case of vision, include here pupils wearing glasses where the correction is the best that can be obtained although not 20/20.
9. In the column "Pupils With Orthopedic Defects"—under Poor Posture, Flat Feet, etc. include only those that are recommended for further mechanical treatment.
   (a) In all cases of enlarged tonsils that are not diseased, make a notation on the pupils health record card. Do not report them on the Weekly Progress Report unless they are referred on Form 13047.
   (b) Under the heading "Malnutrition" do not record cases that are underweight unless they present more of the symptom-complex that is found; such as, anemia, etc.
10. In the column "Pupils needing Refraction Recheck" record only those cases where the examination indicates that the vision can be improved by the use of new lens.
11. Vaccination—The Law requires that every child attending school shall present conclusive evidence of a successful vaccination (See Vaccination Law and Regulations). The number recorded in column "Vaccination Verified" plus the number noted in the next two columns must equal the total number of pupils examined. It is necessary, therefore, to include the number of children whose vaccination has been previously verified on the pupils record card in the column "Vaccination Verified Cicatrices."
12. Immunization—Where there is no record of immunizations on the Pupils Health Record Card, a note here will help. Such as:
   (a) No immunization in this district.
   (b) Notice was not sent to parents.
   (c) Records incomplete.
13. Do not record on Weekly Progress Reports examinations made in more than one district. The Weekly Progress Report represents work done in each individual district. If two districts are worked in one week you will need two Weekly Progress Reports.
14. If an Examiner is examining in a number of rural schools in a township and covers more than one school in any day, the records on the Weekly Progress Report should be totaled for that day and only one notation made covering the total examinations made in all schools in that district on that day.
15. When more than one doctor is working in a district on one day or on different days, their names should be recorded opposite the days worked, for identification, as well as on the top of the Weekly Progress Report.
16. Do not hold Weekly Progress Reports in the field. Return them weekly with the printed copy of the Auditor's Check Report. The Auditor's Check Report in all instances must be in duplicate for each days work and must be attached to the Weekly Progress Report when submitted.
17. When all schools in a district have been completed (not just one building) note at the bottom of the Weekly Progress Report "District Completed." We do not want this information on each individual school when it is completed. It is necessary for us to have this notation when the district has been completed, as it is from this report that the voucher is made out for the examiner's signature.

IE. In the columns denoting days of week examinations are made, you will note that the column has been divided into two parts. In the column marked "Def." include all cases having remediable defects found during the current examination. In the column marked "Cor." note all corrections that have been made since the last examination. Corrections noted in this column must be satisfactory to the medical examiner at the present examination. This is in accordance with the requirements of Act 425.

JOHN W. GERMAN, JR.,
Chief, School Division.

MEDICAL EXAMINATION CODE

The first column on the Pupil's Health Record is used for recording the results of the medical examination. The second column is for recording corrections. The medical examiner must record his findings according to the code. Where conditions are normal, indicate with a small check. Where the condition requires a "Notice to Parent," enclose the code with a circle. Underline any defect which is not correctable. Where a special examination is requested by the medical examiner, use an X. Record under remarks any findings which can not be indicated by the code. Separate space has been provided for recording the ear examination and the audiometer tests.

SCHOOL NURSE ANNUAL SERVICE REPORT

This report supplies vital information to the Departments of Public Instruction, Health, and Public Assistance. In order that the effectiveness of this program be correctly evaluated, it is the obligation of every school nurse to furnish complete and accurate information on each item in this report.

1. Each school nurse serving several districts will submit one summarized report.
2. Each district employing two or more school nurses will submit one summarized report.

DIRECTIONS

Prepare three (3) copies of this summarized report for distribution as follows:
a—One copy to the county or district superintendent.
b—One copy to the School Nursing Adviser, Department of Public Instruction, Education Building, Harrisburg, not later than July 15.
c—One copy to the District office for use by the principal and school nurse.

LETTER OF TRANSMITTAL

To the Members of the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania:

There is presented herewith a report on public school building subsidies in the Commonwealth. This study was undertaken by the Joint State Government Commission as a part of the continuing study of the public schools of the Commonwealth directed by the General Assembly in House Concurrent Resolution No. 79, Session of 1953.

The continuing study of the public schools is being carried on under the general supervision of the Commissioner's Executive Committee. Under authority of Act of 1943, March 8, P. L. 13, Section 1, the Commission appointed a special subcommittee on public school building. On behalf of the Commission, the cooperation of the members of the special subcommittee is gratefully acknowledged.

Baker Royer, Chairman.

RECOMMENDATIONS

I. It is recommended that, in calculating the amount of reimbursement on account of rentals, reimbursement for building construction cost be based upon a legislatively specified cost standard or upon actual cost, whichever is smaller, and reimbursement for site cost be based upon actual acquisition cost. The standards should be defined in terms of cost per pupil—that is, total construction cost divided by the rated pupil capacity of the building. The following standards are recommended:

A. For new elementary schools—$1,100 per pupil.

B. For new secondary schools—$1,700 per pupil.

C. For new combined elementary-secondary schools—a weighted average of the elementary and secondary standards, the weights being the rated elementary capacity and the rated secondary capacity of the combined building.

D. For additions or alterations to existing buildings, the standards listed above should be employed and the actual cost per pupil for comparison with the standard cost per pupil calculated as follows: Sum the insurance or appraisal value of the existing building, exclusive of the value of equipment, and the construction cost of the addition or alteration, and divide such sum by the rated pupil capacity of the altered or expanded school plant.

II. It is recommended that reimbursement for all the annual rentals of a particular project be calculated on the basis of a constant equalization level. Reimbursement on account of those projects for which a rental was paid to an authority during 1954-55 should be calculated on the basis of an equalization level of $4,500. For projects for which the initial rental is paid subsequent to the school year 1954-55, the amount of rental reimbursement should be calculated on the basis of the equalization level applicable during the year in which the general construction contract is awarded, or $4,500, whichever is greater.

III. It is recommended that the existing rental reimbursement formula be revised with a view to:

A. Removing the discontinuity at a standard reimbursement fraction of .6.

B. Reducing the rental reimbursement percentage somewhat for those districts with a standard reimbursement fraction less than .5.

IV. It is recommended that the Commonwealth inspect projects of local school building authorities during construction

INTRODUCTION

Partial Commonwealth reimbursement of the lease rental paid to an authority or other nonprofit corporation on account of school building construction (exclusive of equipment) constitutes the only direct Commonwealth participation in capital-outlay expenditures of local schools districts.[1] School construction financed by the sale of general obligation bonds of a school district is not subsidized by the Commonwealth.

Subsidies were first made available in 1949 on account of rentals paid to the State Public School Building Authority; in 1951, reimbursement was extended to rentals paid by a school district to a municipality authority or other nonprofit corporation. Prior to 1950, almost all public school construction was financed by issuance of general obligation bonds of school districts. From 1950 to date, authority financing has accounted for about 85 percent, and school district financing about 15 percent, of total public school construction.

Commonwealth reimbursement on capital account is designed to enable every school district, regardless of its economic position, to provide adequate school plant for its pupils. The determination of "adequacy" is an administrative function of the Department of Public Instruction; the department may withhold its approval of any school building project which it deems inadequate or substandard as an educational facility.

Variation in the portion of building rentals reimbursed is facilitated by use of the "standard reimbursement fraction," which is a measure of a school district's need-capacity relationship. The standard reimbursement fraction is computed as follows: The district's market value of taxable real estate per teaching unit is multiplied by four mills, and the product is substracted from the statutorily defined maximum subsidy or "equalization level" ($4,500 for the school year 1953-54); the difference is then divided by the equalization level.

The rapid growth in school construction since 1950 is largely attributable to the availability of rental subsidies. In 1950-51, about 200 school districts were paying building rentals to authorities or other nonprofit corporations; by 1954-55, the number had increased to about 1,000.

Section I

STATUTORY BASIS FOR RENTAL SUBSIDIES

Under the provisions of Act No. 557, Session of 1949,[1] rentals paid by a school district to the State Public School Building Authority were reimbursed in the amount of the rental multiplied by one-half the district's standard reimbursement fraction, without reference to the minimum value of the fraction used for current expense reimbursement.

The Municipality Authorities Act of 1945 was amended in 1951 to permit school districts to form authorities for the purchase or construction of public school buildings.[2] Also in 1951, by Act No. 627, rental reimbursement was extended to school districts paying rentals to municipality authorities or other nonprofit corporations.[3] By the same act, the calculation of the amount of the rental subsidy was changed as follows:

1. If the standard reimbursement fraction of the school district is equal to, or less than, .5999, the amount of the rental reimbursement is determined by multiplying the annual rental by one-half the standard reimbursement fraction.
2. If the standard reimbursement fraction of the school district is equal to, or greater than, .6000, the amount of the rental reimbursement is determined by multiplying the annual rental by the standard reimbursement fraction multiplied by itself.

[1] Closed school subsidies, which may be considered an indirect payment on capital account, are discussed in Section VI.

Act No. 431, Session of 1953, provides in part:

The Superintendent of Public Instruction shall not give his approval to any phase of any project or any project to be undertaken by the State Public School Building Authority or by any municipality authority or nonprofit corporation that would cause the approved reimbursable projects for such purposes to exceed four hundred and twenty-five million dollars ($425,000,000) in the aggregate for all the authorities combined for projects already undertaken and to be undertaken.[4]

Prior to 1953, there was no statutory definition of the cost items upon which rental reimbursement was to be based. The Department of Public Instruction reimbursed on both reasonable construction and reasonable equipment costs. Act No. 431, Session of 1953, defined the cost items upon which rental reimbursement was to be based subsequent to the effective date of the act (August 26, 1953) as that portion of the annual rental charge "sufficient during the period of the lease to pay the cost of acquiring or constructing the school buildings, the cost of acquiring the land upon which the school buildings are situate, and the interest on such cost. . . ."

A statement furnished by the Department of Public Instruction on July 30, 1954, lists the cost items which are to be included and those which are to be excluded in calculating the amount of Commonwealth reimbursement. Among the items to be included in calculating the amount of reimbursement are the following:

1. Bond counsel fee
2. Local counsel fee
3. Insurance on building during construction
4. Printing of bonds, lease, and indenture.

Among the cost items to be excluded in calculating Commonwealth reimbursement are:

1. Bond discount
2. Trustee's fees
3. First year's rent included in bond issue.

A complete list of the cost items, excluded or included, is given in Appendix A.

Section II

AGGREGATE PROJECT COSTS

Approvals of reimbursable projects by the Department of Public Instruction reached the maximum amount of $425,000,000 in October, 1953. Of this aggregate amount—whether for projects already constructed, under construction, or planned for construction—approximately $115,000,000 is attributable to projects of the State Public School Building Authority and $310,000,000 to school construction by municipality authorities or other nonprofit corporations.

The statutory limitation applies to approved reimbursable project costs, not to the total cost of projects. The department reviews building plans and does not approve for reimbursement the cost of any elements of the building which it deems unnecessary for an adequate school plant. The disapproved element may be all, or part, of a facility (such as a swimming pool or part of a gymnasium) or may consist of building materials which are considered unnecessarily expensive for the educational purpose involved. In some cases, the nonreimbursable costs are financed over time, and the reimbursable rental is reduced accordingly. Other districts, rather than finance nonreimbursable costs over time, make a cash payment to the authority to cover the cost of nonreimbursable elements, and the full rental is the basis for reimbursement.

The estimated total cost of approved authority projects plus the estimated cost of projects for which general obligation bonds were issued by school districts since January, 1950, is about $541,000,000. The components of this total, together with the estimated approved reimbursable project costs, are as follows:

	Estimated Total Cost of Approved School Projects	Estimated Approved Reimbursable Projects Costs
Municipality authority and other nonprofit corporation projects (as of November, 1954)	$332,423,000	$308,192,000
State Public School Building Authority projects (as of November, 1954)	116,308,000	114,068,000
School district projects (dollar volume of general obligation bond issues for school construction—Jannary, 1950, to November, 1954)	92,135,000	.....
Total	$540,866,000	$422,260,000

As previously noted, the limit of $425,000,000 on aggregate reimbursable project costs was reached in October, 1953, but cancellations of projects since that time and completion of some projects at lower costs than originally estimated have resulted in a current aggregate of $422,260,000, leaving $2,740,000 for additional reimbursable projects or for differences between actual and estimated costs of projects already approved.[1] Included in the aggregate amount of $422,260,000 are approved reimbursable costs in the amount of $65,000,000 for projects not yet under construction.

As of November, 1954, some 160 projects totalling $120,000,000 had been submitted to the department for approval since the statutory limitation was reached.

In connection with the statutory restriction of $425,000,000 on approved reimbursable project costs, it should be remembered that reimbursable project cost is necessarily smaller than the amount on which the Commonwealth subsidy is based, which is the total of approved project costs and interest costs. For example, assuming that money is worth 3 percent and that projects are amortized over a period of 30 years, the total amount on which the Commonwealth would reimburse over time would be 1.53 times the approved reimbursable project costs.

In other words, under these assumptions, although total reimbursable project costs are statutorily limited to [4] 1953, August 26, P. L. 1471.

[1] For approved reimbursable project costs by county, see Appendix B.

$425,000,000, the total amount paid over a period of 30 years by both the Commonwealth and local school districts would be approximately $650,000,000. Hence, Commonwealth rental reimbursement is not limited by the maximum aggregate project costs, since the amount of the total obligation over time depends also upon interest rates and maturity periods

Section III

INTEREST RATES AND MATURITY PERIODS OF SCHOOL AUTHORITY BOND ISSUES

The amounts of the lease rentals upon which Commonwealth subsidies are based depend not only upon building construction and site costs but also upon the interest rates at which authorities borrow and the maturity schedules of authority bond issues. Higher interest rates produce both higher annual charges and a greater total payment over the life of a bond issue. To amortize $1,000 over 30 years at 3 percent requires annual payments of about $51, or a total of $1,530 over the period. At 4 percent, the annual charge rises to $57.83 and the total to $2,313. For a given interest rate, however, lengthening the maturity period reduces the annual charge while increasing the total payment over the period. To amortize $1,000 over 35 years at 3 percent requires an annual payment of $46.54 and total payments of $1,629. In addition, longer maturity periods usually result in higher interest rates. While a lender may be willing to provide money for 30 years at 3 percent, he may demand 3.1 or 3.2 percent for a bond issue with a maturity period of 35 or 40 years.

Legal Provisions Relating to Bond Marketing Methods for Authorities and School Districts

Under statutory provisions, latitude in section of bond marketing methods varies among school districts, municipality authorities, and the State Public School Building Authority:

General Obligation Bonds of School Districts.—The law provides that the school district "shall sell such bonds to the highest responsible bidder or bidders. . . . Where . . . no legal bid has been received then it shall be lawful for such municipality to sell the same . . . at private sale . . . within six months . . . at a rate of interest not exceeding the maximum rate originally advertised."[1]

Available evidence indicates that the great majority of school district general obligation bond issues are sold at public sale.

Bonds of Municipality Authorities Constructing School Buildings.—These bonds "may be sold at public or private sale for such price or prices as the Authority shall determine. . . ."[2]

Only a small number of municipality authority school construction bond issues have been sold at public sale. Between 80 and 90 percent of such issues have been sold by negotiation.

State Public School Building Authority Bonds.—The law provides that these bonds "shall be sold to the highest responsible bidder . . .: Provided, that any of said bonds may be sold to the State Employes' Retirement Board, the State Employes' Retirement Fund, or to the School Employes' Retirement Board, or to any other custodial board or fund, without advertisement or competitive bidding."[3]

To date, all original bond issues of the State Public School Building Authority have been sold to the State Employes' Retirement Board or the School Employes' Retirement Board by negotiation.[4]

Net Interest Cost Rates

Average net interest cost rates of bond issues for school construction financed by school districts, by municipality authorities, and by the State Public School Building Authority for the period 1950 to June, 1954, appear in Table 1, page 16.

From an inspection of Table 1, it appears that average net interest rates of municipality authority bond issues are generally about one percentage point higher than average net interest rates of school district general obligation bonds. Aside from possible variations in net interest rates due to differences in credit standing of the particular school districts borrowing directly and those districts utilizing an authority, two factors account for the differential between the average net interest rates of school district and municipality authority bond issues.

1. Part of the differential may be attributed to a difference in the average amount of bond issues. Insofar as a larger bond issue leads to a higher annual charge, relative to the borrowing district's resources, or to a longer maturity period, higher interest rates would obtain. For school districts, the bond issues included in Table 1 averaged $400,000; for municipality authorities, the average bond issue was about twice as large, or $800,000.

2. A given district can obtain funds at more favorable interest rates if it borrows directly than if it utilizes the instrumentality of an authority. It is considered in the bond market that authority financing entails an inherently greater risk than financing with general obligation bonds. In several studies of the matter, it has been estimated that authority bonds carry a rate of interest ranging from one-half to one percent higher than general obligation bonds of the same political subdivision.[5] On the basis of data for a limited number of school districts in Pennsylvania which have borrowed by both methods, it is estimated that the net interest rate on authority bonds averages about three-fourths of a percent higher than the net interest rate of general obligation bonds.

Referring again to Table 1, it may be noted that, since 1950, as the number of municipality authority bond issues increased the number of general obligation bond issues decreased. To the extent that existing statutes relating to rental reimbursement encourage the authority method of financing as opposed to school district financing, they generate increased Commonwealth costs.

In general, for both school district-financed and municipality authority-financed school projects, all funds estimated to be required to complete the project are obtained prior to the start of construction. The State Public School Building Authority operates in a different manner. The authority estimates the amount of funds necessary to cover all costs of a number of projects and negotiates a trust indenture for this amount at a specified rate of interest. As construction proceeds, bonds are issued in an amount sufficient to meet current construction payments. The interest rates shown in Table 1 for the State Public School Building Authority are the average interest rates at which bonds were issued during the specified years.

Table 2 contains a listing of the various trust indentures of the State Public School Building Authority, by date, rate of interest, maximum amount, and amount of bonds issued, to November 1, 1954.

Table 2 shows that bonds issued by the State Public School Building Authority totalled $68,881,800, as of November 1, 1954.

[5] See, for example, Public Authorities in the States (Chicago, Illinois: The Council of State Governments, 1953), p. 72.

As noted previously, all original bond issues of the State Public School Building Authority have been sold either to the State Employes' Retirement Board or to the School Employes' Retirement Board at negotiated interest rates. Depending upon the period of construction, the maximum time span between the agreement upon interest rates and the actual borrowing of funds may be several years. Hence, the authority may find itself in a position of borrowing money at a rate of interest either above or below the market rate. However, if market rates fall subsequent to negotiation of the trust indenture, any bonds issued by the authority may be refunded at small cost, since all authority trust indentures specify that bonds may be called at par.

Maturity Periods

Both State Public School Building Authority and municipality authority bond issues are limited by statute to a maturity date not exceeding 40 years from the date of issue.

In revenue financing, it is customary for the annual charge to be at least 20 percent greater than the required annual debt service. All school authority issues contain this feature. If there is no default, the 20 percent "margin of safety" reduces the maturity period by about one-fourth—depending upon the rate of interest and the amortization period.

Maturity periods of bonds issued by municipality authorities for school construction range from 5 to 40 years. Of the total amount of these issues, only about 16 percent is accounted for by bond issues of less than 30 years maturity. Issues with a maturity period of 40 years represent 23 percent of the total amount. The average maturity period for all municipality authority bonds for school purposes is about 33 years.

No bond issue of the State Public School Building Authority matures in less than 35 years. The average maturity period for all issues of this authority is about 37 years.

Section IV

REIMBURSEMENT FORMULAS

The amount of the annual rental to be paid by a school district or group of school districts to an authority on account of a leased school building is determined at the time of financing. For almost all projects, the rental is a contant amount over the life of the bond issue.

For a given district, however, Commonwealth rental subsidies vary with the value of the standard reimbursement fraction. Possible future changes of the local effort rate aside, variations in a district's standard reimbursement fraction may be generated by changes in three factors:

1. The pupil load of the school district, measured by average daily membership

2. The taxable capacity of the district, measured by market value of taxable real property as determined and certified annually by the State Tax Equalization Board

3. The maximum subsidy or equalization level, statutorily defined as $4,500 for the school year 1953-54 and increasing by $200 annually to $5,500 for the school year 1958-59 and thereafter.

Changes in the realtionship between pupil load and market value of real property reflect changes in a school district's ability to meet its expenses. Increases in the equalization level are intended to compensate school districts for mandatory annual salary increments due certain classes of professional employes. There appears to be no reason why subsidies on capital account should increase due to higher equalization levels. Such increases shift part of a constant cost from a school district to the Commonwealth, although the district's need-capacity relationship may be unchanged.

It is estimated that Commonwealth obligations on account of rental subsidies for the biennium 1955-57 for projects now under lease could be reduced by approximately $900,000 if the equalization level were to remain constant at $4,500. For future biennia, the reduction would be greater—an estimated $3,000,000, for example, for the biennium 1959-61.

The existing rental reimbursement formula provides that the amount of reimbursement shall be determined by multiplying the rental by one-half the standard reimbursement fraction if the fraction is equal to, or less than, .5999, and by multiplying the rental by the standard reimbursement fraction squared if the fraction is equal to, or greater than, .6000.

It is recommended that the existing rental reimbursement formula be replaced by a revised formula. The revised formula modifies the existing formula as follows:

1. The discontinuity at a standard reimbursement fraction of .6 is removed.

2. The rental reimbursement percentage is reduced somewhat for those districts with a standard reimbursement fraction less than .5.

The rental reimbursement percentage for those districts with a standard reimbursement fraction of .6 or greater would be unchanged.

Section V

CONSTRUCTION COSTS

Since 1949, more than 360 new school buildings have been constructed by municipality authorities and the State Public School Building Authority. In addition, authority-financed alterations to school buildings number in the hundreds.

Construction costs of these projects range widely; for buildings of like capacity, the cost varies as much as 300 percent.

Differences in the prices of items which enter into school construction account for only a small portion of the cost differentials. Since 1949, according to indices for the major urban areas in Pennsylvania, building prices have risen between 20 and 30 percent. While geographic price differentials can be estimated with but little precision (for many areas in the state, building price indices do not exist), available evidence indicates that the maximum geographic building price differential is in the neighborhood of 25 percent. Hence, a combination of the maximum building price change over time and the maximum geographic price differential would amount to about 60 percent.[1] In other words, a school building erected in 1954 in the section of the state with highest building prices would cost roughly 60 percent more than an identical structure built in 1949 in a low price area.

To a large extent, the wide variation in the cost of authority-financed school buildings is explained by differences in design, in the choice of building materials, and in the type and amount of nonclassroom facilities provided.

[1] On the basis of a 30 percent increase in building prices since 1949 and a geographic price differential of 25 percent, building prices in the high price area in 1954 would be 162.5 percent (130 percent of 125 percent) of the building prices in the low price area in 1949.

In order to attain comparability, construction costs per school have been related to the pupil capacity for which the structure was planned, as reported to the Department of Public Instruction. For purposes of the analysis which follows, construction costs include architests' fees but exclude equipment and site costs and costs of exterior improvements not included in the general construction contract. Per-pupil costs have been adjusted to a 1954 price basis,[2] but an adjustment for geographic price differences is not feasible.

Elementary Schools

A distribution of 220 authority-financed new elementary schools by cost per pupil and by market value per teaching unit of the participating district or districts is presented in Table 4.

Table 4 shows that cost per pupil for these 220 elementary schools ranges from about $450 to about $2,150. The most frequently occurring value is between $900 and $1,000, or about $950. Inspection of the table suggests that there is a tendency for the wealthier school districts to construct schools of a higher cost per pupil. Statistical analysis shows that this relationship is significant but not of great magnitude: On the average, an increase in market value per unit of $100,000 is associated with an increase cost per pupil of about $60.[3]

Secondary Schools

A distribution of 105 authority-financed new secondary schools by cost per pupil and market value per teaching unit of the participating districts is shown in Table 5.

From an inspection of Table 5, it may be observed that per-pupil costs of secondary schools range from about $750 to about $4,350. The most frequently occurring value is about $1,550. On the average, an increase of $105 in cost per pupil is associated with an increase of $100,000 in school district wealth as measured by market valuation per teaching unit.[3]

[2] Prices were adjusted on the basis of Engineering News-Record Building Cost Indices for Pittsburgh and Philadelphia.

[3] Two other possible determinants of cost per pupil were included in the statistical analysis: size of the building in square feet and method of financing—either State Public School Building Authority or municipalty authority. In neither case were the regression coefficients of these variables significant.

Section VI

SUBSIDIES ON ACCOUNT OF CLOSED SCHOOLS

The closed-school subsidy is an annual payment of $200, is perpetuity, to districts of the fourth class or districts of the third class located within townships "for each school permanently closed or discontinued." Fourth class school districts have been eligible for the closed-school subsidy since 1921 [1] and third class districts since 1943.[2]

Contrary to a widely prevailing impression, the closed-school subsidy is not limited to one-room schools but is paid on account of all closed schools. Furthermore, for subsidy purposes, a school is considered "closed" if the type of program offered in a building is changed from secondary to elementary, or the reverse. Unlike other subsidies on both current and capital account, the closed-school subsidy is not made available on an equalization basis. Regardless of relative wealth, each district of the specified classes receives $200 per year for each closed school.

For a school closed prior to 1921 in a fourth class district, the Commonwealth has paid subsidies totalling almost $7,000. Inasmuch as the subsidies are perpetuities, the present value of one closed-school subsidy, at an interest rate of 2 percent, is $10,000.

Currently, subsidies are paid for about 10,000 closed schools, representing a Commonwealth obligation of $4,000,000 a biennium. Under existing legislation, this obligation will increase each biennium.

ITEMS INCLUDED AND EXCLUDED IN CALCULATION OF COMMONWEALTH REIMBURSEMENT ON ACCOUNT OF ANNUAL RENTALS

The following statement was furnished the Joint State Government Commission by the Department of Public Instruction on July 30, 1954.

You are hereby advised that effective immediately the following items may be included in calculating the amount of reimbursement payable by the Commonwealth on account of annual rentals paid by a school district for amortizing the cost of school buildings constructed through an authority.

No.	Item
1.	Bond counsel
2.	Local counsel
3.	Insurance on building during construction
4.	Printing of bonds, lease, and indenture
5.	Engineering survey
6.	Core tests
7.	Construction of sewer plant
8.	Twenty percent overlay included in rent
9.	Construction of water line to source, or providing water by well drilling or other means
10.	Built-in wardrobes or lockers
11.	Clock and bell systems
12.	Permanent chalk boards
13.	Emergency lighting and fire alarm systems required by law
14.	Wiring for public address, radio, or television systems
15.	Built-in vault in secondary school buildings
16.	Folding gymnasium partitions
17.	Limited lighting systems for auditorium and stage
18.	Lighting fixtures
19.	Incinerators
20.	Range hood
21.	Dust removing system
22.	Exhaust-gas removing system
23.	Limited exterior lighting of secondary school building approaches
24.	Bus loading platform and bicycle storage
25.	Structural design providing for built-in equipment although the equipment itself is not to be included
26.	Exterior Flag pole

The following items are excluded absolutely from the calculation of the amount of reimbursement payable by the Commonwealth on account of annual rentals paid by a school district for amortizing the cost of school buildings constructed through an authority.

No.	Item
1.	Bond discount
2.	Reserves
3.	Trustee's fees
4.	Clerk of works or any person or persons employed to supervise building construction
5.	First year's rent included in bond issue
6.	Reproduction of architect's drawings
7.	Financial adviser services
8.	Authority expenses
9.	Auditorium seats
10.	Banking boards in secondary school gymnasiums
11.	Folding gymnasium bleachers
12.	Shower room lockers
13.	Storage for ground maintenance equipment

Excluded items that are qualified in such a manner that the same may be included under certain circumstances, to wit, are:

Item No. 1. Contingencies. This item cannot be considered at the present time, but at a later time the contingency item can be put in its proper category for determination.

Item No. 2. Relocating High Pressure Gas Lines. This item is excluded except in those cases where the Department of Public Instruction has no alternative but to approve the site location.

Item No. 3. Contribution to Sewer Authority. This item is excluded as to payment of any rental charge for use of the sewer. Included in those cases where the only way to extend the sewer line or utility is by paying for it.

Item No. 4. Demolition of Building Site. This item excluded in all cases except where the circumstances are approved by the Department of Public Instruction to include demolition costs.

Item No. 5. Tack Boards. This item is included only where the same is a permanent Tack Board.

Item No. 6. Equipment Cases. This item is included only where the Equipment cases are permanently built in.

Item No. 7. Cafeteria Tray Rail and Serving Counter. This item included built-in counter cost only. The cost of the Tray Rail is excluded absolutely.

ALGEBRAIC SUMMARY OF RENTAL REIMBURSEMENT FORMULAS

Computation of standard reimbursement fraction = F:

E = Equalization level or maximum subsidy

r = Local effort rate = .004

M = Market value of taxable real property, per district (as certified by State Tax Equalization Board)

U = Number of district teaching units, per district, where one unit equals 30 elementary or 22 secondary pupils in average daily membership in a public school

Restrictions:

(1) $U > 1$

(2) Each one-room school operated with approval of State Council of Education credited with at least one teaching unit

(3) When ratio of pupils to teachers exceed 33, U is multiplied by 33 and divided by the pupil-teacher ratio

$$F = \frac{E - r\frac{M}{U}}{E}$$

Rental Reimbursement Formulas:

R = Approval reimbursable rental

A = Amount of Commonwealth subsidy

(1) Existing Formula:

If $F \geq .6$; $A = F^2R$

If $F < .6$; $A = \frac{F}{2} - R$

(2) Revised Formula:

If $F \geq .5$; $A = F^2R$

If $F < .5$; $A = \left\{\frac{F^2}{2} + \frac{F}{4}\right\}R$

LETTER OF TRANSMITTAL

To the Members of the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania:

In accordance with the directive contained in House Concurrent Resolution No. 79, Session of 1953, there is presented herewith a report on the feasibility of establishing a medical school exclusively for the training of residents of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

To facilitate the study, the Commission, under authority of Act of 1943, March 8, P. L. 13, Section 1, created a subcommittee on the feasibility of establishing a medical school exclusively for the training of Pennsylvania residents. On behalf of the Commission, the cooperation of the subcommittee is gratefully acknowledged.

The Commission wishes also to express its appreciation to administrative and financial officers of the several medical schools in Pennsylvania for their cooperation in supplying pertinent data.

FINDING

The Joint State Government finds that, at this time, the establishment of a school of medicine exclusively for the training of Pennsylvania residents is not feasible.

RECOMMENDATIONS

The Joint State Government Commission recommends that:

I. When additional facilities for medical education are required, such facilities be provided at existing medical schools.

II. Medical schools, as a condition to receiving Commonwealth aid, be required to (1) maintain their records in such fashion as to show, on a per-student basis, total training costs, expenses on current account, overhead costs, and value of donated services, and (2) submit to the appropriations committees of the General Assembly records showing total enrollment and enrollment of Pennsylvania residents.

III. Pennsylvania medical schools receiving Commonwealth aid establish different tuition charges in favor of Pennsylvania residents.

IV. The General Assembly direct a continuing study of medical education in Pennsylvania.

INTRODUCTION

The objective of proposals for establishment of a medical school "exclusively for the training of residents of the Commonwealth" may be to improve the opportunities of Pennsylvanians to become doctors of medicine, regardless of where they are likely to practice, or to increase the number of practicing physicians in Pennsylvania.

Section I of this report deals with the opportunities of Pennsylvanians to obtain a medical education. The section presents data relating to medical training facilities in Pennsylvania and other states, numbers of applications and applicants for admission to medical schools, and, for the six medical schools in Pennsylvania, the number of qualified Pennsylvania applicants denied admission (excluding applicants known to have been admitted to other medical schools), admission policies, tuition charges, costs, and Commonwealth appropriations.

Section II presents an analysis of data relating to the number of physicians per population in Pennsylvania and other states and the interstate migration of medical school graduates.

Section I

MEDICAL TRAINING OPPORTUNITIES AVAILABLE TO PENNSYLVANIANS

Since the medical training opportunities of Pennsylvanians are not confined to Pennsylvania medical schools, informed judgment regarding the "feasibility of establishing a medical school exclusively for the training of residents of the Commonwealth" requires an examination of medical training facilities both in Pennsylvania and in other states.

Table 1, to which reference is made throughout this section, presents for each medical school in the United States, as of 1953-54, ownership, enrollment, tuition charges, percent of first-year students who at the time of matriculation were residents of the state in which the school is located, and number of applications per student admitted.

As shown in column 1 of the table, there are 73 medical schools in the United States which in 1953-54 offered a four-year course of instruction leading to the degree of Doctor of Medicine. The schools are located in 32 states and the District of Columbia. Six schools are located in Pennsylvania; of these, three are affiliated with universities and three have no university affiliation.

In addition to the four-year schools, six schools—Dartmouth Medical School in New Hampshire and the schools at the universities of Mississippi, Missouri, North Dakota, South Dakota, and West Virginia—offer but a two-year course, which must be supplemented by an additional two years of training at a four-year institution if it is to lead to the degree of Doctor of Medicine.

Ownership of Medical Schools

Of the 73 schools offering four-year courses 40 are privately owned, 30 are state owned, and 3 are municipally owned. The ownership pattern associated with schools of medicine resembles the pattern of institutions of higher education in general: The East relies heavily upon private institutions; other sections of the country make extensive use of publicly owned facilities.

All of the medical schools in Pennsylvania are privately owned and receive state appropriations for general purposes.[1]

Medical School Enrollment

In 1953-54, enrollment (column 2 of Table 1) at the four-year medical schools ranged from 181 at Woman's Medical College in Pennsylvania to 750 at the University of Tennessee College of Medicine. Enrollment in the six medical schools in Pennsylvania varied from 181 at Woman's Medical Colloge to 666 at Jefferson Medical College.

Student Charges at Medical Schools

Columns 3 and 4 of Table 1 present, for each medical school in the United States, data relating to annual student charges for residents of the state in which the school is located and for non-residents.

None of the privately owned schools differentiated in its charges to resident and nonresident students. For students attending these schools, charges ranged from $577 at the Howard University College of Medicine in the District of Columbia to $1,283 at the College of Medical Evangelists in Los Angeles, with an average of $856. For resident students attending publicly owned medical schools, charges ranged from $103 at the University of Texas School of Medicine to $800 at the University of Louisville School of Medicine with an average of $423, which is $433 less than the average for privately owned schools. However, 32 of the publicly owned schools differentiated in their charges between resident and nonresident students.[2] This differential ranged from $85 at the University of North Dakota School of Medicine to $2,000 at the University of Colorado School of Medicine; the average differential in charges for nonresidents was $313.

Student charges at the six medical schools in Pennsylvania for the academic year 1953-54 ranged from $700 at the University of Pittsburgh to $921 at the University of Pennsylvania. No differentiation in student charges between Pennsylvania resident and nonresident students is made at any of these schools.

[1] For total Commonwealth appropriations (1941-43 through 1953-55) to Pennsylvania medical schools, see Appendix A.

[2] Two publicly owned medical schools, as a matter of stated policy, did not admit nonresident students. Four others made no differentiation in charges between resident and nonresident students, but two of these, and some of the 32 which did make differential charges to nonresidents, had no nonresident admissions in 1953.

Commonwealth Appropriations to Medical Schools

Table 2 (columns 3, 4, and 5) shows receipts of the medical schools in the Commonwealth from student charges and, on a per-student and per-Pennsylvania-student basis, from Commonwealth appropriations.[3] Average annual Commonwealth appropriations per student (column 4) varied within rather narrow limits—from $1,463 for Hahnemann Medical College to $1,628 for the University of Pittsburgh School of Medicine. On the other hand, average annual Commonwealth appropriations per Pennsylvania resident student (column 5) varied widely —from $1,662 for the University of Pittsburgh School of Medicine to $4,391 for Woman's Medical College.

Per-student Costs

It is difficult to determine with exactitude the cost incurred by a medical school in Pennsylvania in training a medical student. The cost incurred by the school consists of both expenses on current account and charges on capital account. The institutions under review do not keep their records in such a manner as to permit establishment of reliable cost data. However, in cooperation with financial officers of the institutions, the staff of the Joint State Government Commission has analyzed the records of five schools and established approximate training costs, in accordance with accepted accounting procedures, for the academic year 1953-54. These data are shown in columns 6, 7, and 8 of Table 2.

Most of the schools, in addition to furnishing instruction, engage in research activities. In those cases in which a faculty member was engaged in both teaching and research, a portion of his salary was allocated to training costs on a time basis. It should be noted, however, that participation in research is generally considered a valuable adjunct to teaching activity.

Currently, the costs incurred by the long-established[4] Pennsylvania medical schools do not constitute the entire cost of training medical students. Some instructional services are rendered to the schools without charge. Estimates of the value of such services rendered during the academic year 1953-54 have been made by the deans of four of the medical schools in Pennsylvania and are presented in column 9 of Table 2. While the estimates range from $548 (Hahnemann) to $1,330 (Woman's) per student, the services are valued at approximately $10 per hour at each school; the differences are due principally to variations in the number of hours of instruction furnished without charge to the various schools.

[3] Commonwealth appropriations are for general purposes and are not earmarked for training or research.

[4] All of the medical schools in Pennsylvania were founded over fifty years ago. For dates of organization, see Appendix B.

Applications and Applicants

The ratio of applicants for medical school admission to accepted applicants is an index of the demand for admission to medical schools. Over the last two decades this ratio has undergone noticeable changes. This variation may be noted in Table 3, which shows the total number of applications received by medical schools in the United States, the number of applicants represented by these applications, applications per applicant, the number of applicants accepted, and the ratio of applicants to accepted applicants, for those academic years from 1934-35 through 1953-54 for which published data were available.

The ratio of applicants to accepted applicants (column 6) was relatively stable over the period 1934-35 through 1941-42, ranging from 1.7 to 1.9, increased to a peak of 3.5 in 1948-49, and declined to 1.9 in 1953-54.

It should be pointed out that the number of applications exceeds the number of applicants because a single applicant may apply for admission to more than one school (see column 4). A sizeable decline in the number of applications received, similar to the national trend since 1950-51, is reflected in the experience of Pennsylvania medical schools, shown in Table 4.

The ratio of applications to admissions at each medical school in the United States in 1953 is shown in column 6 of Table 1. This ratio ranged from 1.2 at the State University of Iowa College of Medicine to 17.1 at the Cornell University Medical College in New York City. For the schools in Pennsylvania, the ratio varied from 4.2 at Woman's Medical College to 13.0 at Temple University School of Medicine.

Admission Requirements

It appears that the ratio of applications to admissions for a given school is determined in part by the expectations of potential applicants for meeting the admission requirements of the school. Insofar as such expectations are reduced because of admission requirements unrelated to scholarship and aptitude (such as residence requirements), the scholastic and aptitude qualifications of the applicants from which the school may select its students tend to be correspondingly reduced. To Illustrate: For the entering class in 1950-51, "the average of the Medical College Admission Test scores for students admitted to those 39 schools which apparently practiced little or no restrictions [on the basis of residence, race, religion, or sex] was significantly higher than the comparable average for students admitted to 40 schools which did restrict." [5]

A study of the admission requirements of the six Pennsylvania medical schools,[6] as published in their respective bulletins, shows that:

1. Though the six medical schools may admit an applicant who has but three years of work at a liberal arts college, all except the schools of Temple University and the University of Pittsburgh indicate a preference for applicants who have completed four years of college work.

2. All six schools require an applicant to show evidence that he has successfully completed specified college courses in the basic sciences.

3. Four of the six—Hahnemann Medical College, Temple University School of Medicine, University of Pennsylvania School of Medicine, and Woman's Medical College—require that an applicant take the Medical College Admission Test.

4. Four of the institutions—all except Temple University School of Medicine and the University of Pittsburgh School of Medicine—require that an applicant take a physical examination.

5. Four schools admit both men and women. Jefferson Medical College admits only men; Woman's Medical College admits only women.

Resident Students and Residence Requirements

In 1953-54, the proportion of first-year students from the state in which the school is located was greater, on the average, for publicly owned than for privately owned medical schools. (See Table 1, column 5.) It appears that this is in part attributable to the residence requirements and differential tuition charges of publicly owned schools.

Though the official bulletins of the six medical schools in Pennsylvania—all privately owned—do not specify any residence requirements, perusal of Table 5 indicates that since 1948 the majority of the members of the first-year class of each school, with the exception of Woman's Medical College, were residents of the Commonwealth.

Some students at medical schools in Pennsylvania become legal residents of the Commonwealth during their course of study at these schools. Table 5 indicates that, despite this, the percent of all students who were residents of the Commonwealth was, in some years, less than could have been expected on the basis of the percents of first-year students in that year and the three prior years who were Commonwealth residents. This situation appears to be attributable in part to two factors: First, in the evaluation of the scholarship and aptitude of applicants by admissions committees at Pennsylvania medical schools, doubts are resolved in favor of the resident applicant rather than the nonresident applicant.[7] This procedure is likely to produce a higher "drop-out" rate for resident than for nonresident students. And, when students are admitted with advanced standing in the third year, especially from the two-year medical schools, there seems to be a high probability that such students will be residents of states other than Pennsylvania. For example, in 1953-54, of the 226 first-year students enrolled in the six two-year medical schools, only one, a student at the Dartmouth Medical School, was a Pennsylvania resident.

Pennsylvania Applicants and Medical Training Facilities

In 1953, 1,186 residents of Pennsylvania applied for admission to medical schools in the United States; of this number 52 percent were not admitted. The evidence indicates that, currently most Pennsylvania applicants who are not admitted either do not apply to, or are not qualified for admission to, Pennsylvania medical schools. The Joint State Government Commission has been advised by the deans of the Pennsylvania medical schools that, aside from applicants known to have been admitted elsewhere, for the academic year beginning in September, 1954, a total of less than ten qualified Pennsylvania applicants were denied admission to Pennsylvania schools because of the capacity limitations of existing training facilities.[8]

It appears that it is not economical to construct medical training facilities for an anticipated total load of less than about 200 students, which would call for the admission of approximately 50 new students per year. Such an annual enrollment would be considerably in excess of the total number of qualified Pennsylvania applicants who were not accepted by Pennsylvania medical schools in 1954.

[7] Testimony of the deans of Pennsylvania medical schools before the Commission's subcommittee, November 30, 1954.

[8] The accommodation of more Pennsylvania students at Pennsylvania medical schools could result from the establishment of a medical school in New Jersey, which until 1954 had no medical training facilities. In the academic year 1953-54, 71 students in the first year classes of Pennsylvania medical schools were residents of New Jersey. The medical school established at Seton Hall University, to be conducted at the Medical Center in Jersey City, New Jersey, is expected to be ready to accept students in September, 1955.

Section II

NUMBERS OF PHYSICIANS AND INTERSTATE MIGRATION OF MEDICAL SCHOOL GRADUATES

The patient-load which can be carried by a single physician is influenced by a number of factors which change over time, among them medical techniques, hospital and clinical facilities, organizational arrangements for medical practice, and means of communication and transportation.

Numbers of Physicians

At a given time, comparisons of the availability of physicians' services among geographic areas must be based upon the number of physicians (and the number of specialists) in relation to the population to be served. Table 6 shows, for each of the forty-eight states, the number of active non-federal physicians per 100,000 civilian population (1949), by type of practice. In Pennsylvania, the number of active non-federal physicians per 100,000 population was 128, compared to the national average of 121 (column 2). Further, column 7 indicates that 37 percent of the physicians in private practice in Pennsylvania limited their practice to a specialty, compared to 36 percent for the United States as a whole.

In 1953, there were 734 persons per licensed physician in Pennsylvania. The number varied by county from 296 persons in Montour County to 3,372 persons in Sullivan County.[1] (For details, see Appendix D.)

Among the measureable factors which appear to influence the number of physicians serving the population of a given state or locality are degree of urbanization, extent of hospital and clinical facilities, per capita income, availability of public health services, number of residents who complete medical training in the state or elsewhere, and extent of medical training facilities.

While the relative importance of the various factors has not yet been established, available evidence strongly suggests that the extent of medical training facilities is not the governing factor. For example, Pennsylvania (with six medical schools) and New Jersey (with no medical school) had the same number of active non-federal physicians per 100,000 civilian population in 1949. In addition, Arizona, Delaware, Florida, Idaho, Maine, Montana, Nevada, and Rhode Island—all states without medical schools—had more active physicians per population than had Alabama, Mississippi, and South Carolina—all states with medical schools.

[1] Comparable data are not available for the United States. It should be noted that "physicians licensed" is more inclusive than "active non-federal physicians."

Interstate Migration of Medical School Graduates

The interstate migration of medical school graduates is of considerable magnitude. Table 7 presents for each of the forty-eight, states, as of 1949, the number of active physicians graduated from all medical schools located in the state (column 2) and the number of these physicians residing in the state (column 3) and outside of the state (column 4). Column 5 shows the number of active physicians residing in the state but trained elsewhere. Column 6 presents the net "export or import" of physicians (the difference between columns 4 and 5). Column 7 expresses the net export as a percentage of the total number of active physicians who were trained within the state.

Of the 31 states in which four-year medical schools were located, 16 showed a net export equivalent to from 2 percent to 65 percent of the physicians trained within the state, and 15 showed a net import.

While, in 1949, 80 percent of the active physicians in Pennsylvania were graduates of Pennsylvania medical schools,[2] 8,840, or 47 percent, of the 18,647 active physicians who had been trained in Pennsylvania were practicing outside the Commonwealth. This emigration was partially offset by an immigration of 2,447 physicians trained in medical schools outside of Pennsylvania. This resulted in a net export of 6,393 doctors of medicine, the equivalent of 34 percent of those trained in Pennsylvania.

Data for past years indicate that the percentage of Pennsylvania residents who leave the Commonwealth after graduation from Pennsylvania medical schools is smaller than the comparable percentage of nonresidents. Of the 1940 graduates of medical schools in Pennsylvania who were residents of the Commonwealth at the time of matriculation, 28 percent were practicing outside of Pennsylvania in 1950, as compared with 85 percent of the 1940 graduates who were residents of other states at the time of matriculation.[3]

[2] Appendix D presents a distribution of physicians licensed to practice in Pennsylvania in 1953, by location of the medical schools from which they graduated.

SUMMARY OF ADMISSION REQUIREMENTS OF MEDICAL SCHOOLS IN PENNSYLVANIA: ACADEMIC YEAR 1952-53

[Based on bulletins of the respective schools, 1952-53]

Of the six medical schools in Pennsylvania, four admit both men and women. Enrollment at Jefferson Medical College is restricted to men, and enrollment at Woman's Medical College is restricted to women.

Other requirements for admission were as follows:

Academic High School Education

Jefferson Medical College: Four years of approved high-school credits required.
Temple University School of Medicine: Four-year course required.
University of Pittsburgh School of Medicine: Specific subjects required. Applicants unable to provide satisfactory credentials from preparatory schools required to pass entrance examinations conducted by Pennsylvania Department of Public Instruction or College Entrance Examination Board.

Other schools: No statement.

Undergraduate College Education

Hahnemann Medical College: Specific course requirements. Preference given to applicants with degrees from institutions approved by American Medical Association. Emphasis placed on "B" average or better in science courses. Candidates with but three years of college work considered only in exceptional cases.

Jefferson Medical College: Three years, with specific course requirements. Right is reserved to recommend further study and degree.

Temple University School of Medicine: Three years at approved college of arts and sciences. Specific course requirements.

University of Pennsylvania Medical School: Four years considered most desirable. Specific course requirements. Applicants without degrees accepted only in exceptional cases.

University of Pittsburgh School of Medicine: Three years, with specific course requirements.

Woman's Medical College: Four-year liberal art course with degree from accredited college considered best preparation. Three years minimum. Specific course requirements; others suggested.

LETTER OF TRANSMITTAL

To the Members of the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania:

Pursuant to the directive of the General Assembly contained in House Concurrent Resolution No. 79, Session of 1953, there is presented herewith a report on livestock marketing in Pennsylvania.

The Commission, in accordance with the Act of 1943, March 8, P. L. 13, Sestion 1, created a subcommittee to direct the study of livestock auctions and other facilities for livestock trading in the Commonwealth. On behalf of the Commission, the cooperation of the subcommittee is gratefully acknowledged.

BAKER ROYER, Chairman.

Appendix Table. Livestock Auction License Fees, Estimated Annual Receipts from License Fees, Services Rendered by the State at Auctions, and Estimated Costs of Such Services 23

RECOMMENDATIONS

The Joint State Government Commission recommends:

I. That the license fee for livestock dealers be $10, and that dealers who are commission agents at stockyards pay, in addition, $.02 per head of livestock sold.

II. That all livestock auctions be required to maintain bonds comparable to those which the federal government requires at marketing establishments under its jurisdiction.

III. That the sale of reactor cattle be permitted at livestock auctions under conditions specified in regulations of the Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture relating to the transportation, handling, and sale of reactor cattle.

INTRODUCTION

In Pennsylvania, livestock is sold at auctions, at stockyards (Lancaster and Pittsburgh), directly to packers and butchers, to dealers for resale to other buyers, and directly to farmers or breeders.

Generally, only sales at auctions and at stockyards, which represent the bulk of livestock sales in Pennsylvania, are subject to governmental inspection and regulation.

Throughout this report, the word "stockyards" is used to designate installations which are sometimes referred to as "public livestock markets" or "public terminal markets." Physically, a stockyard consists of livestock pens in which animals are kept and fed pending sale. Anyone who desires to sell livestock at the stockyard consigns the animals to a specific commission merchant operating at the stockyard.

The word "auctions" is used in the report to designate installations which are sometimes called "public auctions," "company sales," or "livestock auctions." An auction consists of livestock pens and an auction enclosure. Anyone who desires to sell livestock takes it to the auction, where it is offered at public sale.

Prior to the depression of the '30s, stockyards accounted for by far the greater part of livestock sales. In the past twenty years, however, auctions have become increasingly important livestock marketing centers.

Section I

SALE OF LIVESTOCK AT AUCTIONS AND STOCKYARDS

Changes in the relative impotrance of sales of selected classes of livestock at auctions and stockyards in Pennsylvania over the period 1942-1952 are shown by Table 1. The table shows the numbers of cattle, calves, hogs, and sheep and lambs sold at auctions and at the stockyards in Lancaster and Pittsburgh as fractions of the total numbers of animals sold in Pennsylvania.

Examination of Table 1 shows that the relative number of animals sold at auctions has increased over the period under review.[1] For example, auctions accounted for .34 of all cattle sold in Pennsylvania in 1942; by 1951, the fraction had risen to .78.

Although the relative volume of business of auctions increased between 1942 and 1951, the absolute value of business the the stockyards did not necessarily decrease. In 1942, for example, 463,000 animals were sold at the Lancaster stockyard, while in 1952, 477,000 were sold at the same market.

[1] The fractions shown for any one year do not add to 1, because, in any year, the same animal may be sold several times.

Table 2 shows the growth of auctions in Pennsylvania in terms of both numbers of auction licenses issued by the Commonwealth and numbers of animals examined by veterinarians at the auctions.[2]

Column 2 of the table shows that between 1942 and 1952 the number of licenses issued to operate auctions increased from 42 to 71, or 69 percent. Over the same period, total number of animals examined by veterinarians at the auctions (column 7) increased from 466,000 to 1,074,000, or 130 percent. The number of cattle examined (column 3) increased from 128,000 in 1942 to 284,000 in 1952, an increase of 122 percent. The comparable increases for calves (column 4), swine (column 5), the sheep (column 6) were 125 percent, 155 percent, and 39 percent, respectively.

[2] Numbers of animals examined do not necessarily equal numbers of animals sold, because potential sellers may find no buyers or may choose to withdraw their stock.

NOTES TO TABLE 1, PAGES 6 AND 7

a—Total animals sold are estimates of livestock sold for slaughter plus out-of-state shipments for feeder purposes, prepared by the U. S. Department of Agriculture. Refer to Meat Animals—Farm Production and Income, 1950-51 and 1945-49 (U. S. Department of Agriculture, Bureau of Agricultural Economics mimeographed release, April, 1952, and Statistical Bulletin No. 113 [Washington, D. C.]) b—These data are derived from veterinarians' reports of numbers of animals inspected, filed weekly with the Bureau of Animal Industry, Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture.

c—From Livestock Market News Statistics and Related Data, 1951 (U. S. Department of Agriculture, Production and Marketing Administration Statistical Bulletin No. 118 [Washington, D. C., November, 1952]). Receipts are saleable receipts only and exclude livestock fed in transit and consigned directly to local packers and hence not sold in the stockyards.

d—Auction data exclude dairy cows, heifers, and bulls not sold for slaughter, but include all steers, some of which were sold for feeder purposes. Data for Lancaster and Pittsburgh include sales for all uses, but few dairy animals for other than slaughter purposes are sold through stockyards.
e—Data for all markets include both feeder and slaughter calves.
f—Auction data exclude feeder pigs. Data for Lancaster and Pittsburgh include pigs for all purposes. Relatively few feeder pigs are sold through stockyards.
g—Auction data include only animals sold for slaughter. Lancaster and Pittsburgh data include animals sold for both feeder and slaughter purposes. Numbers of feeder sheep and lambs sold at auction have been relatively small, and virtually all sales from stockyards are for slaughter purposes.

a—Some auctions ceased operating before the end of the year, while others began operations after the beginning of the year. Consequently, the number of licenses issued during a year usually exceeded the number of auctions actually doing business continuously during the year.
b—Number licensed and doing business as of July 1, 1953.
c—Number of auctions as ascertained by a Farm Credit Administration survey. Refer to Livestock Auction Sales in the United States (Farm Credit Administration, Cooperative Research and Service Division Bulletin No. 35 [Washington, D. C., 1939]).
d—Compiled from weekly reports filed with the Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture by the auction veterinarians. The number of animals sold is approximately equal to the number inspected, the difference between the two being the number of animals condemned by the veterinarian.
e—Includes horses and goats (negligible in numbers), as well as the classes of livestock listed separately.

The map on page 11 shows the locations of auctions and stockyards in Pennsylvania, the approximate annual volume of business in terms of number of animals examined) at these markets, and the value of livestock by county.

The map shows that, of the 64 auctions operating in Pennsylvania in 1952, 28 had a volume of less than 10,000 animals; 7 auctions had a total volume exceeding 40,000 animals. The largest volume at any auction during that year was 83,000 animals. Pittsburgh and Lancaster stockyards had volumes of 193,000 and 482,000 animals, respectively.

Prior to the development of auctions, the farmer with a few animals to sell had, for all practical purposes, no alternative but to sell his stock to a dealer in livestock or a local butcher. Auctions, originally stimulated by the low livestock prices of the '30s and the farmers' search for more economical marketing methods, have remained substantially local markets. Examination of the records of several of the larger auctions in Pennsylvania indicates that the auction trading radius generally does not exceed fifty miles and that well over 90 percent of livestock traded through auctions in Pennsylvania is of Pennsylvania origin.

The differences in the extent of the market trading areas of auctions and stockyards are strikingly illustrated by a listing of the states of origin of livestock traded at the Lancaster stockyard during 1953 (Table 3, pages 13 and 14).

Though the number of animals received at the stockyards from other states relative to the number received from Pennsylvania has decreased over time, the table shows that the yards still operate in a national market. During 1953, livestock were shipped to the Lancaster stockyard from thirty-four other states and the District of Columbia. Of the total livestock received, 5.9 percent were shipped from Virginia, 5.4 percent from Missouri, and 4.1 percent from Illinois. Approximately 70 percent were of Pennsylvania origin.

Section II

GOVERNMENTAL REGULATION OF AUCTIONS AN STOCKYARDS

The sales at both stockyards and auctions may be subject to federal and state regulation. Depending upon the location of the stockyard or auction, it may also be subject to local zoning and sanitation ordinances.

Federal Regulation

The objectives of federal regulation are the prevention of the spread of livestock disease and the control of yardage and commission fees.

Under the provisions of federal law, the Secretary of Agriculture has the power to "make such regulations and take such measures as he may deem proper to prevent the introduction and dissemination of the contagion of any contagious, infectious, or communicable disease of animals . . . from one state or territory of the United States or District of Columbia to another."[1]

Interstate transactions are of relatively greater importance at stockyards than at auctions, and federal veterinary inspection is maintained only at major stockyards.

Under the provisions of the Packers and Stockyards Act of 1921, the federal government, through the Secretary of Agriculture, regulates the yardage, commission fees, or auction fees charged at both auctions and stockyards if the pen space of such facilities exceeds 20,000 square feet.[2] Livestock markets under federal regulation and commission merchants at such markets must execute and maintain a performance bond or its equivalent, the amount of which is determined on the basis of the daily volume of business.

State Regulation

Regulation by the states of auctions operating within their boundaries generally has been concerned with achieving one or more of the following objectives:

1. Curbing the spread of livestock disease
2. Preventing fraud and deception in trading at the auctions
3. Assuring that the auctions are not employed as "fences" for stolen livestock.

To aid in achieving the first objective, some states require that animals traded at the auctions be inspected and certified by a veterinarian, that auction facilities meet certain sanitary requirements, that certain classes of livestock be vaccinated, dipped, or inoculated, and that auction operators maintain specified records of the buyers and sellers of livestock so that disease may be more readily traced. Measures to prevent fraud and deception include regulations regarding weighing procedures and the recording of weights, feeding of livestock and payments for feed, and the filing by auction operators of certain records with the state authorities. Some states require proof of ownership of livestock by the sellers.

Proof of financial responsibility of the auction operators (as assurance of ability to pay sellers) is required in at least sixteen states. In such cases, the maintenance of a bond is the typical procedure. The amount of the bond required varies widely. In some states, it is a flat amount, typically $10,000. In other states, the amount of the bond varies with the volume of business transacted by the auctions. Very few states require that dealers in livestock, other than auction operators, be bonded. One of the few states requiring a bond for dealers is Ohio, where the amount of the bond is determined by the average daily volume of sales, but in no case is it less than $2,000 or more than $15,000.

Virtually all states require that auctions be licensed. License fees vary widely among the states.[3]

The states have not attempted to regulate charges and fees at the auctions. The absence of state regulation of fees charged at the auctions may be explained in terms of economic considerations: The charges of stockyards are federally regulated. There appear to be no impediments to the establishment of auctions. Since local buyers and sellers can trade either through the stockyards or through the auctions, direct regulation of the fees charged by auctions appears unnecessary.

REGULATION OF STOCKYARDS AND AUCTIONS IN PENNSYLVANIA

In Pennsylvania, federal regulation under the Packers and Stockyards Act is limited to the stockyards at Lancaster and Pittsburgh and the auction at New Holland. Federal sanitary supervision is maintained at the two stockyards with respect to animals traded in interstate commerce.

Commonwealth regulation of livestock auctions and stockyards is directed towards curbing the spread of livestock disease. Regulations pertaining to the marketing of reactor cattle—animals which by official laboratory test are judged positive to Bang's disease (brucellosis) or tuberculosis—specify that these animals may be sold only through the Lancaster or Pittsburgh stockyards or directly to a licensed dealer or licensed slaughtering establishment. Herd owners have contended that available marketing outlets are insufficient to establish competitive prices for reactor cattle. The Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture advises that it can develop methods, rules, and regulations which will assure the safe handling of reactor cattle at livestock auctions.

At the two stockyards in Pennsylvania, veterinary inspection service is provided by state-employed veterinarians, who also supervise the premises with respect to all sanitary matters. It is estimated (on the basis of 1953-54 operations) that the cost to the Commonwealth of providing these services is $12,950 annually consisting of costs of direct veterinary inspection plus administrative costs. Stockyards are not required to obtain a license or pay a fee to the Commonwealth. However, a commission merchant operating at the stockyards must obtain a livestock dealer's license at a cost of $5 per year.[4] During the average year, tital revenues to the Commonwealth from dealers' licenses obtained by commission merchants operating at the stockyards amount to approximately $100.

Under the provisions of Pennsylvania law,[5] livestock auctions are reuired by the Bureau or Animal Industry, Department of Agriculture, to follow these procedures:

1. Apply annually for a livestock dealer's license (fee $5 per year)
2. Submit to inspection of the facilities by an agent of the Department of Agriculture
3. Employ a licensed veterinarian to: inspect all animals or pass upon previously issued certificates of inspection and vaccination, vaccinate all hogs sold for purposes other than immediate slaughter, quarantine animals not fit for human consumption, dip sheep and goats, file a report summarizing the results of his inspection, and supervise cleaning and disinfecting of the premises after each sale
4. Maintain an accurate record of sales such that animals sold and associated buyers and sellers may be identified, and retain such records for a period of two years.[6]

Pennsylvania has no specifications regarding weighing procedures, proof of ownership of animals, or financial responsibility of auction operators. However, it appears that procedures voluntarily employed by many auctions operating in Pennsylvania are similar to those in other states where they are mandated by law.

To assure compliance with the law and administrative rulings, Commonwealth-employed supervisors make periodic visits to all auctions. The annual cost of such supervision plus administrative costs attributable to these activities is estimated (on the basis of 1953-54 operations) at $3,800. Revenues to the Commonwealth from auctions amount to $5 per auction per year, or approximately $325 annually.[7]

Concerning the magnitude of costs incurred by the Commonwealth in connection with stockyards and auctions, it may be noted that it costs the Commonwealth approximately $13,000 annually on account of two stockyards, whereas the annual Commonwealth cost for the approximately sixty-five auctions operating in the state is but $3,800. The difference between these figures is due to the fact that veterinary inspection at the stockyards is provided by the Commonwealth, whereas the auctions are required by the Commonwealth to employ veterinarians to inspect the animals traded there.

[4] Agents of commission merchants are required to obtain an annual license at a cost of $1.

LETTER OF TRANSMITTAL

To the Members of the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania:

Pursuant to the directive of the General Assembly contained in House Concurrent Resolution No. 79, Session of 1953, there is presented herewith a report on Pennsylvania's mineral deposits.

Under authority granted by the Act of 1943, March 8, P. L. 13, Section 1, the Commission created a subcommittee to facilitate the study of Pennsylvania's mineral deposits. On behalf of the Commission, the cooperation of the members of the subcommittee is gratefully acknowledged.

The Commission wishes also to express its appreciation to representatives of the U. S. Department of the Interior and to The Pennsylvania State University, the University of Pennsylvania, and the University of Pittsburgh, for cooperation in supplying the subcommittee with pertinent information and professional opinion.

RECOMMENDATIONS

The Joint State Government Commission recommends that:

I. A Resource and Industrial Development Board be established for the purpose of co-ordinating geological survey, mineral research, and development work, the membership of such board to consist of representatives of management, labor, and the sciences.

II. The technical operation of the Pennsylvania geologic survey be transferred to State College, Pennsylvania, and the sum of $700,000 for the biennium 1955-57 be appropriated for purposes of the survey.

III. The appropriation to The Pennsylvania State University, School of Mineral Industries, be increased by $250,000 for the biennium 1955-57 for the purpose of developing better methods of mineral extraction and utilization.

IV. The mineral industries be contacted with a view of ascertaining the extent of possible private financial participation in research, survey, and developmental activities.

INTRODUCTION

On July 19, 1954, the Joint State Government Commission Subcommittee on Pennsylvania Mineral Deposits met at State College, Pennsylvania, with a panel of specialists from the United States Department of the Interior, The Pennsylvania State University, the University of Pennsylvania, and the University of Pittsburgh.[1]

The subcommittee reviewed with the specialists the facts relating to volume and value of mineral production in Pennsylvania, employment in the mineral industries, and means and ways of maximizing the Commonwealth's mineral potential.

[1] A list of the representatives of the Department of the Interior and the universities appears in the Appendix.

The specialists pointed out that only one-third of the Commonwealth has been geologically mapped. They were of the opinion that an attempt should be made to prepare, within the shortest possible time, a detailed, comprehensive, and up-to-date geological map of the Commonwealth. It was the consensus of the specialists that the compilation of such a mineral deposit inventory was essential to the future welfare of Pennsylvania as a mineral producer and processor.

It was brought to the attention of the subcommittee that, from the standpoint of organizational pattern and performance, the geological surveying and mineral research program in Illinois is regarded as outstanding. The Illinois Geological Survey, located at the University of Illinois, has a staff of 115 technical employes and operates under the direction of a six-man Board of Natural Resources. Duties of the survey include locating underground resources, analysis of extraction processes, and development of improved methods of mineral utilization. Field surveys are conducted, topographic maps are prepared, and research is carried on in geology and mineral economics.

The annual budget of the Illinois Geological Survey is about $750,000. This represents about .15 percent of the total annual value of mineral production in Illinois.

For mineral research and geological survey work during the biennium 1953-55, the General Assembly of Pennsylvania apprpopriated the following amounts:

Department of Internal Affairs:
Topographic and Geologic Survey	$250,000
The Pennsylvania State University:
School of Mineral Industries	245,000
Total	$495,000

The total annual allocation for mineral research and geological survey work represents approximately .02 percent of the total annual value of mineral production in Pennsylvania.

Hence, relative to the value of mineral production, the state of Illinois is appropriating about seven times as much money for geological survey and mineral research as is the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

Concerning specific minerals, the specialists seemed to be in substantial agreement in many areas.

With respect to coal—bituminous and anthracite—it seemed to be the consensus that further mechanization of mining operations and the systematic development of mechanical devices specially adapted to Pennsylvania conditions would result in lowered costs and a strengthening of the competitive position of Pennsylvania mines. The specialists agreed that development of new coal derivatives might well improve the market position of coal. It was pointed out that relatively inconsequential quantities of coal are utilized directly in the manufacture of the newer coal derivatives, but that energy for the manufacturing process is often supplied by coal.

Pennsylvania bituminous coal, on the basis of an annual production of 92,000,000 tons, has a life expectancy of more than 300 years, and anthracite, on the basis of an annual production of 30,000,000 tons, has a life expectancy of about 200 years. The geologists on the panel, though cognizant of the immediate problems facing the coal industry, pointed out that coal accounts for 84 percent of the known energy reserves of existing mineral fuels in the United States (measured in British thermal units); oil shale (not yet commercially exploited) accounts for 12 percent; and natural gas and petroleum combined for but 4 percent.

The specialists explained that known recoverable reserves of petroleum in the Commonwealth amount to 111,000,000 barrels and annual production to 11,000,000 barrels. In other words, the life expectancy of Pennsylvania's oil industry is about one decade. However, it is possible that the life of Pennsylvania's oil wells can be extended. The subcommittee was reminded that in the early '30s production per acre was approximately 3,000 barrels, while today, with improved recovery techniques—the result of research financed partially with Commonwealth funds—the yield per acre is approximately 12,000 barrels.

Estimated proved recoverable reserves of native natural gas in Pennsylvania are 539,000,000,000 cubic feet. At the current production rate of approximately 100,000,000,000 cubic feet per year, these reserves would be exhausted in about five and one-half years.

Some of the specialists felt that prospecting for oil and other minerals might be encouraged if the General Assembly saw fit to enact legislation defining the rights of claimants and providing for orderly exploitation methods. Again, it seemed to be the consensus that exploration might be encouraged by the establishment of an adequately staffed, well-equipped testing laboratory for examination and preliminary evaluation of mineral samples.

With respect to clays, it was pointed out that currently all high grade China clays are imported from England or mined in Florida, Georgia, and North Carolina. However, exploratory research suggests that some of the clays found in central Pennsylvania can be inexpensively beneficiated into higher grade clays and may prove to be a commercially exploitable source of aluminum.

Concerning iron, the subcommittee was advised that it will be technically feasible and practicable within a few years to produce an additional 2,000,000 tons of iron ore per year. If this figure is realized, it will represent a 200 percent increase in Pennsylvania iron ore production.

Reviews of Pennsylvania's position as a mineral producer (from the standpoint of both current output and reserves) were presented to the subcommittee by representatives of the United States Departmnt of the Interior. The presentations of Mr. T. W. Hunter, chief, Coal Branch, Bureau of Mines, and Mr. Ralph L. Miller, chief, Fuels Branch, Geological Survey, are reproduced in Section III of this report.

On July 20, 1954, the Joint State Government Commission Subcommittee on Pennsylvania Mineral Deposits met with representatives of management and labor of the mineral industries.[2] The testimony of these representatives dealt largely with measures which might be taken on the federal and state levels of government to improve the position of the industries concerned. The suggestions advanced by management and labor representatives for action on the state level are summarized in Section II of this report.

Section I

MINERAL PRODUCTION

This section deals with the location of known mineral deposits in Pennsylvania, the volume and number of persons, and their wages, directly employed in the extraction industries.[1]

In 1952, the latest year for which comprehensive statistics are available, Pennsylvania's total mineral production was valued at $1,146,000,000. During the same year, the value of fuels—coal (bituminous and anthracite), petroleum, and natural gas—amounted to $930,000,000, which represents 81 percent of the value of all mineral production within Pennsylvania. Again in 1952, fuels accounted for approximately 93 percent of both the number of employes in the extractive industries and the total wages paid by these industries.

The Fuels

Bituminous Coal.—Among the Pennsylvania fuels, bituminous coal ranks first, historically and currently, with respect to value of product, number of employes, and amount of wages and salaries paid.

From Map I (page 9), which shows the location of known deposits of coal in Pennsylvania, it can be seen that bituminous coal mining operations are concentrated in the western counties.

Though bituminous coal is still the leading mineral product of the Commonwealth, its production has declined in recent years. Table 1 on the following page shows tons produced and number of employes, at both commercial and captive mines, for the years 1943 to 1953, inclusive.

Between 1943 and 1953, total production of bituminous coal in Pennsylvania decreased from 139,801,000 to 91,938,000 tons (column 2 of Table 1), a decrease of 34.2 percent. Over the same period, total number of employes (column 5) decreased from 105,900 to 69,100, a decrease of 34.8 percent. The decreases in tons produced and in number of employes were due, in the main, to decreases in commercial production. Commercial production decreased 45.6 percent, whereas captive production decreased but 2.8 percent. At the same time, employment at commercial mines decreased 46.8 percent, whereas employment at captive mines deceased but 1.8 percent.

Chart I shows total production, deep-mine production, and strip mine production of bituminous coal in Pennsylvania for the years 1943 to 1953, and estimated total production for 1954.

Chart I indicates that though deep-mine output has exhibited a declining tendency since 1943, the output of strip operations continued to increase until 1947. However since 1947, the output of both deep-mine and strip operations has declined.

Generally speaking, bituminous production in Pennsylvania has declined more rapidly over the last few decades than has bituminous production in the nation. For example, "During World War I, Pennsylvania provided nearly one-third of the nation's soft coal; during World War II, less than one-fourth; and from 1948 to the present, about one-fifth of the total supply."[2]

The decrease in bituminous output is due to such factors as the substitution of other fuels[3] (e.g., oil and natural gas) and increased efficiency in the utilization of fuels.[4] Fuel substitution, in turn, is in part due to cost differentials.

Cost differentials also obtain among producing regions of identical fuels. In the case of bituminous coal, these differentials emerge in connection with the actual production of the coal as well as in connection with its transportation from mine to market.

Table 2 shows tons per man-day (deep mining) and seam thickness for the principal bituminous coal-producing states.

Examination of Table 2 shows, for example, that in Pennsylvania, which has a average seam thickness of 5.3 feet, a man produces, on the average, 5.07 tons of bituminous coal per day, whereas in neighboring West Virginia, which has an average seam thickness of 5.1 feet, a man produces, on the average, 6.07 tons per day.

In this connection, it may be noted that "Since 1947, the peak production year in the bituminous coal industry, the average f.o.b. mine price has increased more rapidly in Pennsylvania than in other coal producing areas. Nationally, the average f.o.b. coal price increased 18 percent from 1947 to 1953, while f.o.b. prices at Pennsylvania mines rose 27 percent." [5]

[3] It is estimated that between 1943 and 1953 the principal annual market losses by consumer groups were as follows: railroads, 103,000,000 tons; retail dealer deliveries, 62,000,000 tons; general industrial users, 48,000,000 tons; steel and rolling mills, 5,000,000 tons; estimated total annual sales loss, 218,000,00 tons. Ibid., p. 3.

[4] In 1919, an average of 3.2 pounds of coal was consumed in producing a kilowatt-hour of electricity. By 1950, this average had fallen to 1.2 pounds of coal per kilowatt-hour, or an economy gain of 63 percent over 1919. See Minerals Yearbook, 1950, p. 327.

Anthracite Coal—Unlike bituminous coal, which is used for both industrial and domestic purposes, anthracite coal is primarily used for domestic space heating. Again, unlike bituminous coal, which has to meet competition from bituminous coal mines in other regions (as well as from such other fuels as oil and gas), anthracite coal is produced in consequential amounts only in Pennsylvania among the forty-eight states. The production is concentrated in Lackawanna, Luzerne, Northumberland, and Schuylkill counties (see Map I).

Among Pennsylvania minerals, anthracite ranks second only to bituminous coal in value of product, number of employes, and amount of wages and salaries paid. In 1952, anthracite coal accounted for 33 percent of the value of all minerals produced in Pennsylvania, 41 percent of the production employes in all mineral industries, and 39 percent of total wages and salaries paid in these industries.

Between 1943 and 1953, production of anthracite coal declined 50 percent. The decline continued during 1954. Employment in the anthracite coal industry fell from 79,369 in 1943 to 56,952 in 1953, a decrease of 28.3 percent. Production and employment data for the Pennsylvania anthracite industry, 1943-1953, are given in Table 3.

Total anthracite production and deep-mine, strip, and bank production, for the years 1943 to 1953, and estimated total production for 1954 are shown on Chart II, page 12. The chart indicates that, though until the late '40s strip mining production of anthracite coal tended to increase, total production exhibited a declining tendency throughout the period under review.

Petroleum and Natural Gas—Petroleum and natural gas tend to occur together. Map II (page 15) shows that in Pennsylvania the concentrations of these fuels are in the western counties, particularly in McKean, Venango, Greene, Butler, and Washington.

In 1952, petroleum and natural gas production combined accounted for but 6.7 percent of the total value of mineral production in the Commonwealth, as contrasted with 74.4 percent for bituminous and anthracite coal combined.

Table 4 shows production of crude oil and number of employes engaged in crude oil production in Pennsylvania for the years 1943 to 1953. From 1943 to 1953, crude oil production in Pennsylvania declined from 15,757,000 to 10,669,000 barrels. Over the same period, employment in crude oil production declined from 6,098 to 4,107.

The occurrence of the petroleum known in the trade as Pennsylvania Grade Crude Oil is not confined to Pennsylvania. Pennsylvania Grade Crude Oil is also found in New York, West Virginia, and southeastern Ohio. In Pennsylvania, production is facilitatated by so-called "secondary" recovery methods. The crude petroleum is forced to the surface by injecting water or gas under pressure into selected parts of the fields. Had it not been for the development of this method, "Pennsylvania would have ceased to be important in the production of oil." [6]

Though in 1953 Pennsylvania accounted for but approximately one-half of 1 percent of the nation's oil production, it nevertheless furnished about 10 percent of the lubricating oil produced in the United States.[7] In that year, 10,669,000 barrels of Pennsylvania Grade Crude were produced within the Commonwealth.

[6] See Ralph L. Miller, "The Mineral Resources of Pennsylvania and Other States," Section III, page 33 of this report.

[7] In connection with petroleum, it shoud be noted that, specialties aside, it is the raw material from which fuel oil, Diesel oil, gasoline, and lubricating oil are derived. The proportions in which these are produced from a given volume of petroleum depends upon: (1) the chemical characteristics of the petroleum, and (2) the processing technique employed. Within given technological limits, the processing techniques can and are varied to take advantage of the prices which can be obtained for fuel oil, Diesel oil, gasoline, and lubricating oil. Generally speaking, fuel oil is a boiler fuel used for both domestic and industrial purposes and competes directly with coal.

Table 5 shows the production of natural gas and the number of producing gas wells within the Commonwealth for the period 1943 through 1952. Although the number of producing wells decreased from 1943 to 1952, natural gas production in Pennsylvania increased from 93,543,000,000 to 108,684,000,000 cubic feet.

Currently, about 100,000,000,000 cubic feet of natural gas are produced each year in Pennsylvania. Consumption has been in excess of production since 1905. Today, imported gas (largely from the Southwest) supplies approximately two-thirds of the natural gas consumed (approximately 350,000,000,000 cubic feet annually) in Pennsylvania.

Natural gas is imported into Pennsylvania by means of five pipe lines. The most efficient utilization of pipe lines requires constant deliveries from day to day, and, since consumer demand for natural gas fluctuates widely with the seasons, natural gas is stored in large volume. As of December, 1953, approximately 213,000,000,000 cubic feet were stored underground in Pennsylvania. The stored gas is equivalent to approximately 40 percent of the estimated native natural gas reserve and represents an inventory investment of approximately $50,000,000.

Other Minerals

In the aggregate, minerals other than fuels accounted for 19 percent of the total value of Pennsylvania mineral production in 1952. Among the minerals of this group and their percentage contributions to the total value of Pennsylvania mineral production in 1952 are: cement, 8.99 percent; stone, 3.93 percent; sand and gravel, 1.75 percent; and clay, 1.05 percent.[8]

Other minerals which individually contributed less than 1 percent to the total value of mineral production but which were produced in significant amounts (value of production exceeding $1,000,000) include: slate, iron ore, lime, slag, and cobalt.

For the principal Pennsylvania minerals other than fuels, Table 6 shows production for 1943 and production, value of product, and number of employes for 1952.

The value of production for 1952 for the four minerals listed in Table 6 was $180,000,000, or about 16 percent of the total value of Pennsylvania mineral production. In contrast to the decline in production of all fuel minerals in Pennsylvania, the four principal non-fuel minerals registered substantial increases in production over the decade 1943-1952. Cement output more than doubled, while clay output increased threefold. Stone production increased 28 percent, and sand and gravel, 58 percent.

Section II

MINERAL PROBLEMS AND MINERAL POLICIES

Though the basic problem of a mineral industry is the improvement of its economic position, mineral industries differ in the emphasis which they place upon the technological and economic aspects of the problem.

The coal industry, the oil producers, the producers of sand and gravel, the ceramic industries, the slate producers, and the Pennsylvania CIO Council have made specific suggestions for governmental action at the state level.

Bituminous Coal

As has been pointed out, during the recent past the bituminous coal industry has been characterized by shrinking production and contracting employment.

The industry in Pennsylvania attributes its decline to the following: (1) increasing competition from other fuels, particularly natural gas and imported residual fuel oil; (2) a freight rate structure which impedes the flow of Pennsylvania bituminous to important markets; (3) a tax structure within Pennsylvania which imposes disproportionate burdens upon the industry; (4) the enactment, by local units of government, of smoke abatement ordinances which impose restrictions upon the use of specified fuels; and (5) the development of federally financed hydroelectric plants.

The industry recognizes that the jurisdiction of the Commonwealth does not extend to interstate and foreign commerce, and has urged the federal authorities to strengthen the position of bituminous coal in both interstate and foreign commerce.

The industry suggests the following action on the state level:

1. Continuous quantitative and qualitative appraisal of reserves.
2. A continuing and expanded program of research to develop better methods of extraction and utilization.
3. Legislation making it mandatory upon all establishments full or partially financed by state funds to afford coal producers a competitive opportunity to supply space heating and energy requirements.
4. An evaluation of the tax structure with a view of determining the tax burden carried by coal and other industries.
5. Resumption of the acid water control survey formerly conducted by the industry and the Sanitary Water Board in the Pennsylvania Department of Health.

Anthracite Coal

The problem of the anthracite coal industry is similar to that of the bituminous coal industry. The industry attributes its plight to competitive fuels, particularly residual oil.

The anhracite industry endorses suggestions 2 and 3 of the bituminous industry for action on the state level and in addition proposes that, if the federal government fails to appropriate sufficient funds for the building of ditches and flumes, backfilling of stripping pits and cropfalls, improvements to stream beds, driving of underground drainage tunnels and gangways, and construction of underground dams, the Pennsylvania legislature appropriate enough funds to cover the deficiency.

Petroleum

Unlike the coal industry, which, though faced with shrinking markets, has ample reserves, Pennsylvania crude oil producers are faced with both contracting markets and rapidly dwindling reserves.

As has been pointed out, given present recovery techniques, Pennsylvania's oil reserves are estimated at 111,000,000 barrels, which means that at current rates of output the industry has a life expectancy of about ten years. However, it is estimated by the industry that about a billion barrels of crude will remain underground unless new recovery techniques are developed.

The industry attributes its recent reverses to the following: (1) the extensive adoption of selective-solvent processing of lubricating oil stocks by Mid-Continent and other refineries; (2) the assistance given by the federal government to foreign countries in connection with the establishment of refineries, including lubricating oil plants; (3) the widespread adoption of the Diesel engine by American railroads, which has reduced the demand for steam cyclinder oil; and (4) the trend toward production of multi-graded motor oils, which has reduced the use of bright stock.

The industry proposes the following action at the state level:

1, An accelerated program of geological mapping of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania
2. An expanded program of research aimed at the development of superior recovery techniques
3, Consideration of conservation laws which will encourage risk capital into exploratory work.

Sand and Gravel

The principal producers of aggregate (sand and gravel) point out that readily available reserves of sand and gravel are being depleted. To assure the future of the industry, they suggest:

1. An accelerated program of geological mapping of the Commonwealth
2. Resistance of any attempts to impose either a ton-mile tax on truck transportation or a severance tax on mineral production.
3, Memorializing Congress in opposition to the proposed federal tax on inland waterway transportation.

Clay

The ceramics industry suggests:

1. An accelerated program of geological mapping of the Commonwealth
2. Intensive basic research into the mineral composition of Pennsylvania deposits
3. An information service for mineral producers similar to the information services furnished by agricultural experiment stations.

Slate

The slate industry takes the position that expansion of its operations presupposes the development of improved mining techniques, improved methods of utilization of by-products, and extensive market research coupled with effective advertising.

The industry suggests that the General Assembly appropriate funds (approximately $100,000 annually) to The Pennsylvania State University, specifically earmarked for the following research projects:

1. Development of chain-sawing techniques
2. Study of the penetrating sheave
3. Design of a new rotary saw
4. Improvements in wire-sawing methods
5. Design and development of a mechanical splitter
6. Study of new mining and quarrying systems
7. Study of new roofing systems
8. Development of crushed slate products
9. A market and economic survey
10. Erection of a lightweight aggregate pilot plant.

Tourist Trade

With a view of attracting more tourists to the state, the Pennsylvania CIO Council suggests that Pennsylvania statutes relating to spoil banks be revised to accelerate the rate at which stripmined areas are replanted.

Section III

PENNSYLVANIA'S MINERAL POSITION

At the request of the Joint State Government Commission Subcommittee on Pennsylvania Mineral Deposits, representatives of the United States Department of the Interior presented the subcommitee with reviews of Pennsylvania's position in mineral production and mineral resources. The statements of the representatives of the Department of the Interior—Mr. T. W. Hunter, chief of the Coal Branch of the Bureau of Mines, and Mr. Ralph L. Miller, chief of the Fuels Branch of the Geological Survey—are reproduced in this section.

Pennnsylvania's Relative Position as a Mineral Producer

by

T. W. Hunter, Chief, Coal Branch,
Bureau of Mines, United States Department of the Interior

Our highly integrated national economy involves the interdependence and interplay of many complex forces, and the attainment of Pennsylvania's objectives with respect to maximal uttilization of the mineral resources within her boundaries depends, in part, on the relative position of the Commonwealth among the states with respect to the quantities and qualities of minerals produced and production costs, processing, transportation, marketing, consumption, and reserves of these minerals.

It should be emphasized at the outset that in our highly integrated economy there is considerable competition between and among some of the minerals and fuels produced in the respective states. Foreign competition, too, has presented a number of problems in some areas of interest.

In value of minerals produced, Pennsylvania ranks as the third largest state in the nation. It is preceded only by Texas and California, both of which have attained their dominance through the production of petroleum, natural gas, and natural gas liquids. Pennsylvania has attained her high ranking mineral position principally through the production of coal, cement, petroleum, and stone. In 1952, the value of minerals produced in Pennsylvania was about $1,150,000,000. Of this total, coal accounted for $853,000,000, or 74 percent, of which $473,000,000 represented bituminous production and $380,000,000, anthracite. The five next highest minerals in value were cement ($10 000,000), petroleum ($47,000,000), stone ($45,000,00 natural gas ($30,000,000), and sand and gravel ($2 000,000). These minerals, together with coal, account for over 95 percent of the total value of minerals pr duced in Pennsylvania in 1952.

In the mineral fuels group, Pennsylvania also produc natural gas liquids, which include natural gasoline a liquefied petroleum gases. In the field of nonmetall minerals, it produces lime, clays, slate, ground sand a sandstone, pyrites, peat, mica, and tripoli. In the met groups, it produces iron ore, copper, cobalt, gold, a silver.

Pennsylvania is virtually the sole U. S. producer anthracite and ranks second only to West Virginia bituminous coal output. On the basis of value all co produced (bituminous and anthracite), Pennsylvan ranks first. In value of production of petroleum a natural gas combined, it ranks twelfth.

In nonmetallics production, Pennsylvania ranks first cement, stone, and slate; second in lime and clays; thi in tripoli; fifth in mica (scrap) and ground sand and san stone; sixth in pyrites; ninth in sand and gravel; a tenth in peat.

In metals production, Pennsylvania ranks first in coba eighth in iron ore; eleventh in copper; twelfth in gold; a fifteenth in silver.

Before discussing in more detail the principal miner produced in Pennsylvania, let us briefly consider the p tentials of the other minerals produced in the state.

The iron ore mines at Cornwall, active since 1742, recent years have produced an average of about a milli tons per year. By geophysical prospecting, a new unde ground iron ore deposit was recently discovered ne Morgantown. It is well along in development work and expected to produce about 6,000 tons of concentrates p day. By-product production at Cornwall has made Pen sylvania the leading United States producer of coba accounting for almost one-third of our entire cobalt pr duction.

Other minerals produced in Pennsylvania, though minor economic significance at present, are tripoli, abrasive; secondary selenium, a semiconductor; and germ anium, a semiconductor used in transistors and rectifie which is presently recovered from flue dust at metallur ical plants but which may some day come from Pennsy vania coal beds. The large reserves of graphite whi occur near Chester Springs probably could provide t nation with a self-sufficiency in most strategic grades economical milling methods could be developed. Ma anese from open-hearth slags could provide much of t nation's annual requirements if economical extracti processes could be developed. A process to recover mang nese from slags has been developed at Pittsburgh by t Bureau of Mines in cooperation with the American Ir and Steel Institute, and the federal government, throu the General Services Administration, is assisting in t development of a semicommercial plant at Pittston.

Although Pennsylvania has been an important produc of slab zinc for many years, it is not currently a sour of zinc ores. However, the New Jersey Zinc Compa has recently completed the sinking, at Friedensville Lehigh County, of a seven-compartment vertical shaft 1,261-feet designed for hoisting 2,500 tons a day. T roblems involved in sinking the shaft were somewhat nusual and have been described in Bureau of Mines ublications.

The rare metals, gallium, thallium, and indium, may meday be produced from the zinc ores that are smelted three plants in Pennsylvania.

Pennsylvania ranks second to Ohio in the production lime, for which chemical uses are growing. It also nks second to Ohio in the production of raw clay, the ture production of which may be depressed by competion from other materials, such as metals and plastics. he flint clays of central Pennsylvania, on the other hand, epresent a potential source of aluminum. These are now lectively mined to provide high-alumina material for efractories. Techniques for recovering alumina from ennsylvania clays have been studied by the Bureau of lines and successfully tested on a pilot-plant scale.

Although Pennsylvania continues to occupy a leading osition among the states in the slate industry, there are o significant current trends in the industry that would ndicate a potential increase in the future. If the slate industry is to increase its output, measures must be taken o reduce the tremendous waste of rock at quarries and ills. Research conducted at State College has demontrated that waste slate could be used successfully to make late-lime brick and lightweight aggregate.

Pennsylvania ranks high (fourth in value of production in 1952) in the production of sand and gravel, and it eads the United States in the production of stone. Stone s encountering increasing competition from the newer uilding materials, such as glass blocks and architectural oncrete. Aluminum and other metals also are being used o some extent in fields formerly served by stone.

Foremost of the nonmetallic minerals produced in Pennylvania is cement; Pennsylvania leads the states by a vide margin in both tonnage produced and value. The levelopment of prestressed concrete and of lightweight oncrete as a replacement or partial substitute for structural steel in certain types of construction augurs well or a continued high level of activity in cement production. Otherwise the potentials of cement, as of stone, slate, nd gravel, are tied closely to the general trend of busiess and industrial activity, particularly in the field of onstruction, and to public construction programs.

Pennsylvania is the oldest oil producing state in the ountry and has been taking oil from the earth for almost ne hundred years. It is probable that reserves of oil in ddition to those presently known will be proved through he application of improved exploration methods, deeper drilling, and secondary recovery techniques.

While the rate of crude oil production has been declining gradually for many years, in 1953 over $77,000,000 worth of oil, natural gas, and natural gas liquids was produced, equivalent to 6.6 percent of the total value of mineral production in the Commonwealth. Production alone—apart from transportation, processing, and distribution—provided employment for 6,700 persons spread over 25 counties.

Of far more importance to Pennsylvania is the petroleum refining industry, in which the Commonwealth ranks fourth among the states (based on crude oil input capacity of refineries) and accounts for 7 percent of the national total. It is notable that the Philadelphia harbor area—which includes some facilities in New Jersey—is the fastest growing refining center in the country and will, upon completion of construction work now in progress, surpass Los Angeles and rank second only to the Houston-Port Arthur area of Texas. In addition to the large capacity refineries in eastern Pennsylvania, there are the relatively small but highly important Pennsylvania Grade refineries in the western part of the state that contribute a proportionately heavy share to the state's income because of the large quantities of high-valued lubricating oils that they produce.

The transportation and distribution of crude petroleum and its products also make a very substantial contribution to the economy of Pennsylvania. Some idea of the magnitude of these functions may be gathered from the fact that almost 10,000 miles of oil pipelines are buried under the surface of the state. Further evidence of the importance of petroleum in the state's economy is the fact that over three-quarters of the total tonnage moving in the Port of Philadelphia consists of petroleum and its products.

Pennsylvania is much closer to self-sufficiency in natural gas than in oil. The 108,700,000,000 cubic feet of gas produced in the state during 1952 represented just about one-third of the state's consumption. In actual practice, however, as a matter of convenience most of the Pennsylvania gas was shipped to New York State and replaced with gas from West Virginia, Mississippi, and the Southwest. As with oil, the transmission and distribution of natural gas (with some 29,000 miles of pipeline in Pennsylvania) also represents a substantial segment of the state's economy.

According to the 1950 Census, 819,000 dwelling units in Pennsylvania—about 40 percent of all dwelling units in the state—were served by natural gas. Inasmuch as residential use of natural gas in 1952 was 27 percent greater than in 1950, it seems reasonable to assume that more homes are using natural gas and that its use for heating, in addition to cooking and water heating, is increasing.

Looking now to coal, the leading mineral product of Pennsylvania, upon which a substantial part of the economy of the Commonwealth has for many years been based, we know that some serious changes have been taking place. Coal production throughout the country has been dropping substantially during the past year. In view of the steadily increasing demand for energy during recent years, this seems to be a paradox. The reasons for the decline, of course, are the shifts to competing forms of energy, particularly oil and natural gas. The primary reasons for these shifts, in turn, are convenience and comparative costs.

Because of differing characteristics, the bituminous coal and anthracite industries of Pennsylvania will be discussed separately.

Since the inception of soft coal mining in Pennsylvania, total output has amounted to nearly 8,000,000,000 tons. During World War I, Pennsylvania provided nearly one-third of the nation's soft coal; during World War II, less than one-fourth; and from 1948 to the present, about one-fifth of the total supply. Pennsylvania bituminous production in 1953 was 94,000,000 tons. During the first half of 1954, Pennsylvania's rate of production was 25 percent below the first half of 1953, as compared to an 18 percent decrease for the country as a whole.

The decline in coal mine employment has been greater, relatively, than the drop in production. Although nearly 175,000 men were employed in the peak-output year (1918), employment dropped from the 1948 high of recent years (approximately 106,000) to only 76,000 in 1952. Present employment is somewhat less.

The average number of days worked annually in the mines also has declined. Because of increased coal demand and labor shortages during World War II, the average time worked per year rose to 257 days from the 178-day average of the '30s, but by 1952 the average was only 188 days.

To comprehend some of the major changes that have taken place in the soft coal regions, let us turn to the matter of coal mine mechanization. Coal output during World War I was almost entirely from deep mines. During World War II, however, strip mines were responsible for 15 percent of the total production. Since then deep-mine production has accounted for about 75 percent and strip mines about 25 percent of total production. In Pennsylvania, strip output as a fraction of total output has been ahead of the national average by a slight margin. Mechanical undercutting and mechanized underground loading in Pennsylvania are in the same proportion as the rest of the country—95 percent and 75 percent, respectively, of total deep-mine production. Nearly one-half of all coal produced in the United States is mechanically cleaned; Pennsylvania mechanically cleans about 46 percent.

The net tons of coal produced per man-day of labor has much to do with the competitive position of the various coal producing states and regions. During World War I, Pennsylvania mines had the advantage of an output per man per day higher than the national average for all mines. However, that has not been the case for some years since. World War II and the early postwar years found the output per man-day at Pennsylvania mines at a level 7 percent below the national average. Each year since then this disadvantage has grown, until in 1952 the differential had risen to 16 percent. In other words, in 1952 the average output per man-day at Pennsylvania bituminous mines amounted to 6¼ tons, compared to 7½ tons for all mines in the United States. In 1953, the national average was up to 8 tons per man per day. West Virginia mines, with only 7 percent of output produced at strip pits, averaged 7 tons per man-day at all mines, or 12 percent more than Pennsylvania mines. Deep-mine output per man per day in West Virginia averages 23 percent more than output at deep mines in Pennsylvania.

In coal used for the manufacture of oven coke—of great significance to Pennsylvania—the Commonwealth has a substantial margin of total production over total consumption. Of 30,000,000 tons of coking coal produced in the state in 1952, approximately 12,000,000 tons were shipped to other states. However, 4,000,000 tons of coking coal came into Pennsylvania from other states, making a net "export" balance of 8,000,000 tons.

The principal coking coal fields of Pennsylvania, in order of shipments to oven coke plants in 1952, were as follows:

Field	Net tons
Pittsburgh	11,189,000
Connellsville	9,172,000
Central Pennsylvania	6,060,000
Freeport	2,804,000
Westmoreland	374,000
Somerset	361,000
Anthracite	151,000

Pennsylvania's principal "competitors" in coal produced for oven coke manufacture are West Virginia, with a net "exportable" production of over 27,000,000 tons (of a total production of 32,500,000 tons), and Kentucky, with over 12,000,000 tons.

Since 1947, the peak production year in the bituminous coal industry, the average f.o.b. mine price has increased more rapidly in Pennsylvania than in other coal producing areas. Nationally, the average f.o.b. coal price increased 18 percent from 1947 to 1953, while f.o.b. prices at Pennsylvania mines rose 27 percent.

The significant accomplishments of the mines of Pennsylvania and the nation in mechanizing and otherwise improving production methods to reduce costs, increase productivity, and improve the quality of coal are evidence of the real efforts of the coal industry to meet competition. The coal industry generally is alert to changes that will assist in more economical methods of production and is participating, as is the government, in continuing research programs designed to bring greater stability to the industry.

In anthracite production, Pennsylvania has a virtual monopoly. However, the anthracite industry has for quite some time suffered drastic reverses. From a peak of 100,000,000 tons in 1917, production dropped to an average of 80,000,000 tons during the '20s, and 54,000,000 tons during the '30s. During the war years of 1941 through 1945 it increased to an average of 59,000,000 tons per year, from which it dropped more or less steadily to a level or 31,000,000 tons in 1953, the lowest in nearly three-quarters of a century. Production to date in 1954 is behind last year's by 11 percent.

Mine employment has been decreasing continually. From World War I to World War II, employment in anthracite mines was cut in half. By 1952 it was down to 66,000, and at present is about two-thirds of that, or about 45,000.

The average number of days worked per year also has been on the decline. During World War II, increased demand for anthracite and a general shortage of manpower were responsible for an increase to 255 days per year from the 186-day level of the '30s. By 1952, however, days worked per year had dropped to 201, and the current rate is below that.

Labor productivity has increased at a slower rate at anthracite mines than at bituminous coal mintes. From an average of 2.2 tons per man per day in the '20s, average productivity has increased to only 3 tons per man-day so far in the '50s. It is recognized that anthracite mines are not so susceptible to mechanization as are bituminous mines. Nevertheless, increased output per man-day represents one of the greatest potentials of the anthracite industry for reducing unit costs and enhancing its competitive position. Increased efficiency in this respect also would enable the industry to make adjustments in its sizing practices to take greater advantage of the industrial market and offset to a considerable extent its heavy losses in the space-heating markets of New England and the Middle Atlantic states.

In addition to the contribution of coal mining activities er se to Pennsylvania's economy, coal production contributes heavily to many other economic activities in the ate, principally transportation. It provides hundreds of illions of dollars in railroad freight revenue alone and a real factor in the employment of many thousands workers in the various transportation industries roughout the Commonwealth. Substantial declines in al production naturally cause reductions of many milons of dollars in these related economic activities. Hence, nything that can be done to maintain or increase coal roduction within the state will automatically bolster ie economy by millions of dollars worth of related conomic activity.

Having examined trends in the coal industries of ennsylvania and noted the importance of coal in the ver-all economy of the Commonwealth, let us review ie position of coal in the energy markets, the types of arkets which it serves, and the broad changes that have ccurred over the years.

The total demand for energy throughout tht nation has een increasing at a rapid rate—approximately 106 perent in the last twenty years. Since 1940, energy demand r all mineral fuels and water power has increased on n average of 4 percent per year.

Using 1940 as a base point and comparing with 1953 emonstrates that the contributions of the various minrals fuels and water power have undergone tremendous hanges. Bituminous coal and Pennsylvania anthracite gether in 1953 contributed 6 percent less than in 1940. nthracite dropped 42 percent; bituminous coal alone eclined 2 percent. Among the mineral fuels, only solid uels have been declining. Petroleum from all sources as nearly doubled in supply, increasing 97 percent over ie thirteen-year period. From domestic sources, the upply of petroleum increased 74 percent, while the upply of foreign petroleum, on a Btu equivalence, inreased 804 percent. Natural gas supply was 217 percent igher in 1953 than in 1940. Water power was up 73 ercent. All mineral fuel and water power energy comined increased 55 percent.

The importation of petroleum and petroleum products rom abroard has been a matter of interest or concern o those engaged in producing and transporting fuels and o some fuel consumers. A comparison of British thermal nits contributed to the total energy supply by imported etroleum and by domestic coal during recent years ndicates that, in 1940, 54 Btu of coal were produced for ach Btu of petroleum imported. By 1953, the ratio had ropped to only 6 to 1. With respect to Pennsylvania nthracite, the ratio reversed from 5 to 1 in favor of nthracite in 1940 to 3 to 1 for imported petroleum in 953. For bituminous coal, the ratio fell from 49 to 1 in 940 to 5 to 1 in 1953.

Consumption of bituminous coal by the major conuming groups in the United States has undergone great hanges. The largest quantity of bituminous coal conumed in the United States in any one year was 594,-00,000 tons (1943). Using that year as a bench mark, he significance of subsequent changes is outlined below.

By 1953, total bituminous consumption had dropped to 26,000,000 tons, a net decline during the decade of 68,000,000 tons. In contrast to this decline, the over-all nergy market increased by the equivalent of 318,000,000 ons of coal. To put it another way, bituminous coal not only failed to share in the increased energy market but actually lost ground to an extent equal to more than half of the total expansion of the energy market. The principal losses, by consumer groups, were as follows: railroads, 103,000,000 tons; retail dealer deliveries, 62,000,000 tons; general industrial users, 48,000,000 tons; steel and rolling mills, 5,000,000 tons; total loss in these consumer groups, 218,000,000 tons. However, over the past decade bituminous coal consumption increased in three of the principal consuming groups. They are the electric power utilities, which increased consumption by 38,000,000 tons; coke plants, which were higher by 10,000,000 tons; and cement mills, which increased consumption by about 2,000,000 tons.

The remaining portion of the coal market—exports—has had fluctuations, dependent upon requirements by foreign countries and their ability to meet supply. During 1940, soft coal exports were 16,000,000 tons, almost all of which went to Canada. From then until 1947 there was a vast increase in demand for United States coal throughout most of the world. Each year exports increased, until they reached a peak of nearly 69,000,000 tons in 1947. From that point they declined to only 25,000,000 tons in 1950. With the outbreak of the Korean War, in 1951 demand increased and exports rose to more than double the 1950 level, reaching 57,000,000 tons. The expansion of foreign coal production facilities and the decline of requirements abroad, particularly in Europe, resulted in reduction in exports of United States bituminous coal to 48,000,000 tons in 1952 and 34,000,000 tons in 1953. So far in 1954, exports are under last year's by 22 percent; if the current trend continues throughout the year, the export market will have leveled to something around 27,000,000 tons.

Prior to World War II, practically all anthracite exports were to Canada. With increased overseas demands for coal following the war, exports increased to a peak of 8,500,000 tons, 4,500,000 of which went to Canada and 4,000,000 overseas. By 1953, total exports had dropped to 2,700,000 tons, of which all but about 100,000 tons went to Canada. It is not expected that the overseas market will be resumed in substantial amount in the foreseeable future. In addition, there is some concern that British shipments of anthracite to Canada, combined with the transmission of natural gas from Alberta to the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, might seriously affect exports of anthracite from Pennsylvania to Canada.

The recent losses of antracite markets have been principally to natural gas and to oil and are due to factors of convenience as well as of price.

With regard to the future potential of coal in Pennsylvania, as well as througsout the country, let us consider again that the demand for energy throughout the nation has increased approximately 106 percent in the last twenty years, including a 23 percent increase since the end of World War II. Over the past forty years the demand for electric power alone has doubled every ten years, and the rate of increase is accelerating. Anticipating that for some years ahead the great preponderance of our rapidly increasing energy demand must be supplied by coal, petroleum, and natural gas, many industry leaders and experts in energy have predicted that the total energy demand in this country will be so great that within the next twenty to thirty years coal output alone will approximate one billion tons annually. At the same time, they expect that the demand for petroleum products and natural gas will be at least double that of today. Supporting these predictions are estimates that within the next twenty-five years our national population will be around 200,000,000 persons. Certainly such increases in population and demand for electric energy will create strong pressures for the development and production of many new goods and services throughout the entire economy. These prospects are a challenge to all of us, particularly in the fields of both fundamental and applied research, and in the often neglected field of market research.

Among other prospects for fuels is a greater degree of interchangeability. The leading potential in this respect, of course, is the conversion of coal into liquid or gaseous fuels. Because the basic structure of coal contains the elemental substances present in petroleum and gaseous fuels, we have, in our tremendous resources of coal alone, the potential for meeting the heaviest of energy demands for many years to come.

The economic forces that have brought about changes in the use of energy from various sources are being studied widely. We are in a period of transition in which many forces are at work. It is hoped that, from within our system of American free enterprise, there will soon emerge an economic pattern in which all energy sources, and other minerals, will share favorably in assuring the great advancements that have been predicted for our future.

The greatest hope for the mineral industries of Pennsylvania and of the nation lies in their continuing to work aggressively in all these areas toward the ultimate of efficiency in mineral production, processing, transportation, marketing, consumption, and utilization.

THE MINERAL RESOURCES OF PENNSYLVANIA AND OTHER STATES

By

Ralph L. Miller, Chief, Fuels Branch,

Geological Survey, United States Department of the Interior

The general subject of amounts of mineral resources is difficult of treatment, for minerals range in concentrations all the way from the magnificent Pittsburgh coal bed to invisible traces of substances present only to the extent of a few parts per million. Somewhere between these extremes lie most of our mineral resources, but whether or not they are economically recoverable is a continually shifting matter controlled by many factors. To have some definite markers in this shifting area, we should establish a few simple subdivisions of the overall term resources.

Ore is mineral from which a metal or nonmetal can be extracted at profit.

Reserves are the ore masses exploitable under present economic and techonologic conditions or under specified other conditions.

Potential resources are the mineral masses that, for exploitation, demand new technology or more favorable economic conditions than those of today.

Resources are the sum of reserves and potential resources.

The importance of Pennsylvania's fuel and mineral deposits and industries is a well established fact, but I believe it would be in order to discuss briefly each of the more important mineral commodities, with special emphasis on the relationships between the Commonwealth and other states and the nation as a whole.

Let us first consider bituminous coal, of which Pennsylvania in 1953 supplied 21 percent of the nation's total production.

The best available figures on the bituminous coal reserves of Pennsylvania were published by the Pennsylvania Topographic and Geologic Survey in 1928. The figures are based on a minimum bed-thickness of 18 inches and a somewhat low assumed specific gravity, which tends to make them rather conservative. They are not so detailed as the type of estimates now being compiled, and much exploration has been done since, but when adjusted for production and mining losses to the start of 1953, they indicate that the total amount of bituminous coal still in the ground in Pennsylvania is about 60,000,000,000 tons. That is 5.7 percent of the estimated amount of bituminous coal remaining in the entire nation, and it places the Commonwealth ninth among the states with respect to bituminous reserves. Illinois leads with 13 percent of the national total, followed in order by Kentucky, West Virginia, Colorado, Utah, Ohio, Missouri, Alabama, and Pennsylvania. Reappraisals by the U. S. Geological Survey and state organizations now in progress may change the positions of some of the states.

To date, spectographic analyses for the determination of the germanium content in the ash of eleven columnar samples of Pennsylvania bituminous coal and one sample of Pennsylvania anthracite have been made available. The germanium content of the anthracite was negligible, but three samples of the Lower Kittanning bituminous coal bed ash contained about one one-hundredth of 1 percent germanium. Analyses of samples of the same bed in Ohio show a much greater concentration there—about two-tenths of 1 percent of the ash, or twenty times as much. No germanium is yet produced from coal ash in this country, but this is a factor that might possibly have some future effect on bituminous coal mining in the Commonwealth.

The U. S. Bureau of Mines has in recent years been working on estimates of minable reserves of coking coal in several of the eastern states. Thus far, results of this work have been published for eight Pennsylvania counties. On July 1, 1955, this work, by mutual agreement, will be transferred to the U. S. Geological Survey. The studies will be continued, however, and in course of time a complete, new, highly detailed estimate of the amount of bituminous coal in the Commonwealth will have been made by these agencies.

Turning to anthracite, it should be noted that the estimated 13,000,000,000 tons remaining underground in Pennsylvania represent over 90 percent of the nation's supply. Other states with anthracite or semianthracite reserves, and their approximate percentages of the national total, are as follows: Colorado, 5 percent; Virginia, 2.5 percent; Arkansas, 1.5 percent; and the states of Washington and New Mexico which together contain ess than 1 percent. It is estimated that the original distribution of reserves among the several Pennsylvania anthracite fields was as follows: southern field, 48 percent; northern field, 27 percent; western middle field, 22 percent; and eastern middle field, 3 percent.

One of the most active programs of basic geologic investigations now being conducted by the U. S. Geological Survey in the sphere of mineral fuels has been underway for some time in the Pennsylvania anthracite fields. There we have undertaken a complete investigation of the exact location, thickness, character, extent, correlations, and structure of the coal beds and intervening rocks and are collecting the most complete information possible on past and present mining. The maps that have been published are accompanied by sections, figures, tables, and short texts.

The figures on coal reserves just mentioned are taken in large part from the publication "Coal Resources of the United States—A Progress Report, October 1, 1953."

Oil and gas, on the basis of present information, are relatively less abundant in Pennsylvania than in many other states. In recent years nearly all of the high-quality oil production in the Commonwealth has been made possible by injecting water or gas under pressure into selected parts of the fields, forcing the oil to move toward other wells. Had it not been for this technologic improvement, Pennsylvania would have ceased to be important in the production of oil. Even with these so-called "secondary recovery" techniques, petroleum engineers estimate that about half of the original oil will be left in the ground, and extensive research is being conducted in the hope of finding ways to obtain higher recoveries. If such a method is found—and there is real hope—Pennsylvania's production of oil will be extended many years.

Last year, Pennsylvania produced about 10,500,000 barrels of oil, which is about a half of 1 percent of the total U. S. production. However, this yielded about 10 percent of the lubricating oil in the nation. Total oil reserves in Pennsylvania recoverable by present methods are estimated at about 110,000,000 barrels, a little less than one-half of 1 percent of the U. S. total.

Gas is obtained in Pennsylvania from beds of several ages and, like oil, has been exploited for many decades. Pennsylvania's known reserves, recoverable by present methods, are estimated at about 750,000,000,000 cubic feet, about a third of 1 percent of the national total. Recent consumption of natural gas in Pennsylvania has been about two and one-half to three times production in the Commonwealth.

The outlook for future oil and gas production in Pennsylvania is uncertain. The known oil-bearing beds, which are relatively shallow, have been so intensively drilled that it is probable that few pools of appreciable size have escaped discovery.

Several important gas fields, however, have been found in the deeper Oriskany sandstone, most of them east of the early, shallow sources of oil and gas. Although no commercial oil has yet been found in the Oriskany in Pennsylvania, there is good reason to hope that further drilling will yield oil, besides the additional gas that is almost certain to be found. This sandstone is untested in vast areas of the Commonwealth, and the testing will be expensive and financially hazardous. The locations of the oil and gas fields are clearly shown on a map recently prepared by the Pennsylvania Topographic and Geologic Survey.

Still older and deeper beds are present in much of Pennsylvania, and it is entirely reasonable to hope that some of them will eventually yield oil and gas. On the basis of present knowledge, an intensive drilling program cannot be justified, but these rocks will certainly be tested in the future, since they remain one of the large unprospected zones in the East. Even today, a few wells have tested these pre-Oriskany rocks. However, many of them are in the eastern part of the area of possibility, where the beds are closer to the surface but where the prospects do not at present appear very encouraging. Farther west, at even greater depths, they may well contain oil and gas in unpredictable quantities. The U. S. Geological Survey has recently studied some of the oil- and gas-producing beds of western Pennsylvania and parts of several adjoining states. These studies have shown why some areas are not productive and have indicated other areas that may produce.

Let us consider now some of the chief non-fuel mineral resources of Pennsylvania.

Refractory clays—that is, clays that can be used to make heat-resistant products—occur chiefly as underclays beneath bituminous coal beds in the western and central parts of the Commonwealth. These clays are widespread and reasonably flat lying. They are recovered by both strip and underground mining methods, depending largely upon the thickness and nature of overburden. As strip mining is commonly less expensive, an increasing quantity of these clays is produced by this method. Reserves of clay which can be stripped are rapidly decreasing, and most of the remaining clay is beneath so much overburden as to preclude the possibility of its ever being stripped. Higher prices, however, and larger stripping equipment now permit the removal of somewhat greater thickness of overburden than have been removed in the past.

Reserves of underclays for underground mining are very large, and the potential resources even greater. Strip mining reserves are much less—are, in fact, small compared to those available for underground recovery. In the future, underground clay mining is almost certain to increase. Pennsylvania ranks among the first three states in the country in reserves and potential resources of refractory clays.

Of other types of clay, white and buff-burning clays, some of which are refractory, occur in other geologic formations in the central and eastern part of the Commonwealth. They tend to be lenslike bodies of limited extent and, although important, do not rank with the underclays on a statewide or national basis, and resources are small.

Brick and tile clays or shales are more common, occurring in all counties. Resources of these clays and shales are large and present no problem, considering the state as a whole.

High-iron, high-alumina clays that could be a source of aluminum are present in Clearfield County and, according to the Pennsylvania Topographic and Geologic Survey, total more than 5,000,000 tons. These flint and diaspore-bearing flint clays, which are currently unsuited for refractory purposes because of their iron content, are associated chiefly with the Mercer shale member of the Pottsville formation, which is mined for refractory clay. The figure of 5,000,000 tons of potential aluminum ore is believed to be an absolutely minimum estimate; the actual resources of these clays may be many times that amount, because the enclosing Mercer shale member extends over a wide area.

Pennsylvania has, until now, ranked first among the states in cobalt production and resources. Until recently, the principal source has been Bethlehem Steel's Cornwall mine in Lebanon County, where the magnetic ore contains about five one-hundredth of 1 percent cobalt, or one pound of cobalt per ton of ore. Idaho has recently begun supplying a considerable amount of cobalt.

Resources of cobalt are estimated at possibly 30,000,000 pounds at Cornwall and at roughly 20,000,000 pounds in other deposits in eastern Pennsylvania, a total of approximately 50,000,000 pounds. In addition, Bethlehem Steel's deposit in southern Berks County, discovered a few years ago, may have a cobalt content similar to that of the Cornwall ores. The United States today supplies only about 8 percent of its consumption of this metal; most of its supply comes from the Belgian Congo.

Graphite has been mined in Berks, Bucks, Lehigh, and Chester counties. The principal deposits, however, are west of Phoenixville in Chester County. Evaluation of graphite deposits must be based to a large degree upon physical characteristics, and these have never been adequately tested to determine whether the flake is equal in quality to imported graphite now being used for the manufacture of crucibles. Reserves are large enough to warrant this testing.

The Bethlehem Steel Company's Cornwall deposit in Lebanon County is the principal source of iron ore in the Commonwealth. The ore is magnetite; it contains 40 to 42 percent iron and requires beneficiation. Copper, cobalt, and sulphur are recovered as by-products.

Pennsylvania ranks approximately eighth among the states in iron ore reserves, having an estimated reserve of somewhat over 200,000,000 long tons. Of this estimate, less than half is represented by the common iron ore minerals—magnetite, hematite, and brown ore. The reserves of magnetite at Cornwall have been reported as 40,000,000 to 60,000,000 long tons, which is about half of this nation's annual production of iron ore.

A few of the other mineral deposits of the Commonwealth should be mentioned briefly.

Limestone and dolomite, some of high purity, are widely distributed. The important cement industry is based on the limestone deposits, some of which are virtually inexhaustible. Reserves of high-purity limestone suitable for chemical lime and of dolomite from which magnesium might be extracted are more limited.

Silica of high purity suitable for the manufacture of silica brick is obtained from the Tuscarora quartzite, and the reserves are huge. Locally the rocks must be beneficiated to meet the rigid specifications. Other quartzites and sandstones in the southeastern and western parts of the Commonwealth supply raw materials for various silica refractories. The Oriskany sandstone is acceptable locally for glass sand, but reserves of high-purity sand are not great. Other sandstones are used as engine sands and molding sands.

Pennsylvania has long been the most important source of black slate for roofing shingles and granules and for structural purposes. The Lehigh-Northampton district is of greatest importance, furnishing the bulk of the black slate used in the United States for purposes other than granules and electrical switchboards. The Peach Bottom slate, on the Pennsylvania-Maryland line, is of excellent weathering quality but has not been exploited for shingles since World War II. It is, however, the only slate used for roofing granules in the Commonwealth and also furnishes a considerable tonnage of slate flour for use as mineral filler. While reserves of high-quality black slate are not large, they are believed adequate for many years.

The only known major deposit of zinc ore in Pennsylvania is at Friedensville. Accurate reserve figures are not available, but it is known that reserves exceed 100,000 tons of recoverable zinc metal. This is less than 1 percent of the total recoverable zinc metal reserves in the United States, which are estimated at about 16,000,000 tons.

Pennsylvania has been an outstanding producer of mineral products throughout the history of our country. But because Pennsylvania has been a pioneer in mineral production, some of the better and more accessible deposits have been depleted. By contrast, some of the states that have started to exploit their mineral wealth more recently still have their high-grade ores. This factor tends, of course, to put Pennsylvania in a somewhat less favorable position, but the momentum the mineral industries within the Commonwealth have developed constitutes an important factor which, at least for a long time, will tend to offset the advantages associated with virgin deposits in other states.

HIGHWAY SAFETY

JOINT STATE GOVERNMENT COMMISSION

TO THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY

LETTER OF TRANSMITTAL

To the Members of the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania:

Pursuant to the directive of the General Assembly contained in House Concurrent Resolution No. 79, Session of 1953, there is presented herewith a report on highway safety and factors responsible for highway accidents in Pennsylvania.

Under authority granted by the Act of 1943, March 8, P. L. 13, Section 1, the Commission created a subcommittee to facilitate the study. On behalf of the Commission, the cooperation of the members of the subcommittee is gratefully acknowledged.

The investigation has developed evidence that legislative concern with safety on Pennsylvania's streets and highways is amply justified. In 1953, motor vehicles traveled more than 31,000,000,000 miles in Pennsylvania, and motor travel by persons was about 59,000,000,000 miles, and in that year, when 1,643 lives were lost and 70,531 persons were injured, traffic accidents reached an all-time high—129,791 accidents, generating a total cost in excess of $89,000,000.

Past and current measures directed toward making driving safer for Pennsylvania's 4,467,177 licensed motor vehicle operators have not established causes of accidents and have not constituted effective programs for accident prevention. The chance of an accident per mile traveled has not changed significantly over the past seven years and, in 1953, was slightly higher than in 1929.

This study, as well as the 1953 study of the Joint Legislative Committee on Turnpike Safety in which the Commission participated, demonstrates that techniques are available to cope effectively with traffic accident problems and to reduce materially the toll in terms of life and property.

RECOMMENDATIONS

The Joint State Government Commission recommends that:

I. The General Assembly authorize a complete and comprehensive survey dealing with safety upon highways in Pennsylvania, to include, but not be limited to:

A. Driver factors in conjunction with vehicle and highway factors

B. Driver aptitudes and acquired skills for motor vehicle operation

C. Re-examination of accident experience with respect to stopped school buses since enactment of Pennsylvania motor vehicle statutes dealing therewith.

II. Funds for this comprehensive highway safety study be appropriated from the Motor License Fund.

III. Provision be made for furnishing to each district and county highway superintendent information concerning accidents occurring in his district.

Part I

FREQUENCY OF TRAFFIC ACCIDENTS

The all-time high in numbers of traffic accidents and numbers of drivers involved in accidents in Pennsylvania was reached in 1953, and preliminary data indicate that 1954 totals will be at even higher levels. Specifically, 129,791 accidents involving 237,448 drivers were recorded in 1953. The estimated cost of these accidents was in exceess of $89,600,000.[1]

Of the accidents reported in 1953, 45,916 resulted in injuries to 70,531 persons, and 82,411 resulted in property damage only—in each case the highest annual numbers recorded. During that year, 1,643 persons died in 1,464 fatal traffic accidents.

Accident observations over a twenty-five-year period (1929 to 1953, inclusive) show that in the latest year, 1953, the chance of accident involvement per licensed Pennsylvania operator was more than one and one-half times that for the earliest year, 1929. Like accident involvement of drivers, accident frequencies on a travel mileage basis have not tended to decrease—the chance of an accident per mile travel was slightly higher in 1953 than in 1929.

Although total numbers of accidents and chances of accidents per driver and per mile were higher in 1953 than in 1929, both number and likelihood of occurrence of fatal accidents and fatalities resulting therefrom were lower. The likelihood of occurrence of either a fatal accident or a fatality per mile traveled in 1953 was slightly more than one-quarter that of twenty-four years earlier, and the number of persons injured (although at an all-time high) was, on a travel mileage basis, lower than in 1929.

The evidence for the past twenty-five years suggests that measures designed to reduce frequencies of traffic accidents and driver involvement in accidents, compared with measures designed to reduce deaths and injuries resulting from traffic accidents, have been relatively ineffective.

Traffic Accidents, Licensed Operators, Registered Vehicles, and Travel Milleages

In creases over the period 1929 to 1953 in numbers of traffic accidents, licensed operators, registered motor vehicles, and estimated annual miles of vehicle travel in Pennsylvania are shown in Chart I.[2]

In 1929, there were 43,776 traffic accidents, 2,057,085 licensed operators, and 1,788,593 registered vehicles, and vehicle travel is estimated to have been 10,660 million miles. General increases are shown from year to year, except for the years 1942 to 1946. In 1953, there were 129,791 traffic accidents, 4,316,654 licensed operators, and 3,477,331 registered vehicles, and vehicles travel is estimated to have been 31,412 million miles.

In Chart I, the line showing number of accidents is not connected between the years 1948 and 1949, since, due to change in accident reporting requirements, data for 1948 and preceding years are not comparable with data for the years 1949 through 1953.

Reporting requirements are statutorily defined. Act No. 403, Session of 1929 (1929, May 1, P. L. 905), provided for the filing of reports of accidents resulting in injuries or death or total property damage to an apparent extent of $50.00 or more. Act No. 386, Session of 1949 (1949, May 12, P. L. 1297) provides for reporting of accidents resulting in bodily injury or death of damage to the property of any one person in excess of $100.00.

Property-damage accident reporting is affected not only by changes in statutory requirements but also by changes in prices. Generally, in times of rising prices, increasing proportions of accidents will exceed the statutory dollar minimums above which reporting is required, while in times of falling prices the reverse is true. (The effects of price on reporting are but infrequently taken into account in conventional compilations of accident statistics.)

Ratios of accidents to drivers, vehicles, and mileages may be computed from the individual series shown in Chart I. Ratios for 1929 were 2,128 accidents per hundred thousand licensed operators and 2,448 accidents per hundred thousand registered motor vehicles. In 1953, they were 3,007 accidents per hundred thousand licensed operators and 3,732 accidents per hundred thousand registered motor vehicles. The lowest and the highest of these ratios (excluding the years 1942 through 1946) were 1,952 accidents per hundred thousand licensed operators in 1932 and 3,083 in 1951, and 2,395 accidents per hundred thousand registered motor vehicles in 1932 and 3,895 in 1948. The mileage ratios were 411 accidents per hundred million vehicle miles in 1929 and 413 accidents per hundred million vehicle miles in 1953. The lowest and highest accident-mileage ratios (excluding the years 1942 through 1946) were 322 accidents per hundred million vehicle miles in 1936 and 432 in 1948.

[1] Estimated from National Safety Council data; includes damage to vehicles and property, medical expenses, wage losses, and insurance overhead cost (but not claims paid).

Over the past twenty-five years, driver and vehicle involvement in motor vehicle accidents increased more rapidly than number of accidents, because of increasing frequencies of two-vehicle and multi-vehicle accidents. The reported number of drivers (or vehicles) per accident increased from 1.63 in 1929 to 1.83 in 1953.

The 237,448 drivers (or vehicles) involved in accidents in 1953 represented more than a three-fold increase over the number recorded twenty-four years earlier—71,529 drivers (or vehicles) in 1929. Over the same twenty-five years, the number of licensed operators and the number of registered motor vehicles in Pennsylvania approximately doubled. In 1953, the chance of driver involvement in a traffic accident and the chance of motor vehicle involvement in a traffic accident were each more than one and one-half times as great as in 1929.[3]

Numbers of Traffic Accidents, by Type and Numbers of Persons Killed and Injured

Total numbers of traffic accidents, property-damage accidents, injury accidents and persons injured in such accidents, and fatal accidents and traffic fatalities, for the years 1932 (the first year for which separate data are available for each of the types of traffic accidents) to 1953, are shown in Chart II.[4] The greatest total number of accidents and the greatest number of property-damage accidents appear for the latest year shown, 1953, and it is virtually certain that an even greater number of property-damage accidents would have been reported for each of the years from 1949 through 1953 had it not been for the 1949 change in reporting requirements.

A total of 129,791 traffic accidents was reported in Pennsylvania in 1953; 45,916 resulted in bodily injuries to 70,531 persons, and 82,411 resulted in property damage only—in each case, the greatest annual numbers recorded (upper part of Chart II). During the year 1932, a total of 41,004 traffic accidents was recorded. Of these, 26,623 accidents resulted in injuries to 41,836 persons, and 12,603 resulted in property damage only.

Both number of fatal traffic accidents and number of fatalities (lower part of Chart II) were lower in 1953 than in 1932. In 1953, 1,464 fatal accidents resulting in death to 1,643 persons were recorded, while in 1932, 1,778 fatal accidents resulted in death to 1,926 persons.

Traffic Accident Rates

Meaningful traffic accident rates are computed by dividing the number of accident observations by a measure which accurately represents the total of all situations in which accidents could possiby take place (the exposure base). Commonly, accident rates are computed by dividing numbers of traffic accidents (or numbers of persons injured or numbers of persons killed) by travel mileage of motor vehicles or by population.[5] Since it more nearly reflects exposure to accident hazards, travel mileage of motor vehicles appears to be a more adequate base than population.

Accident rates are used as indicators of change in the operation of factors which generate accidents. However, to evaluate current safety programs or select new safety measures, the components of accident observations and accident bases must be investigated. For use in facilitating selection among highway safety measures, accident rates must be computed for groups (drivers by sex and age, for example) for which definable and quantifiable characteristics associated with exposure to traffic accident hazards are known or can be ascertained.

Rates per hundred million miles of vehicle travel for all accidents, property-damage accidents, injury accidents, fatal accidents, and for persons injured and persons killed in traffic accidents are shown for the years 1932-1953 in Chart III.[6]

Inspection of the chart shows that in recent years each of the six rates has been relatively stable, and rates for the total of all acidents and for property-damage accidents have remained at comparatively high levels.

For the total of all types of traffic accidents in Pennsylvania, the rate in 1953 was 413 accidents per hundred million miles of vehicle travel—less than the highest rate (432 for the year 1948), but greater than the lowest nonwartime rate (322 for the year 1936). It is estimated that the comparable rate for the year 1929 (not shown on the chart) was 411 accidents per hundred million miles of motor vehicle travel, indicating that the chances of occurrence of traffic accidents (per mile traveled) were slightly less in 1929 than in 1953. Although rates shown for 1949 and succeeding years are, because of reporting changes, somewhat understated for comparison with rates shown for the years 1932 through 1948, inspection of the chart for the twenty-two years period shows that annual rates for these latter years are comparatively high.

The property-damage accident rate in Pennsylvania in 1953 was 262 accidents per hundred million miles of vehicle travel—more than two and one-half times greater than the 1932 rate of 103. The lowest rate and highest rate over these twenty-two years were 99 and 284 accidents per hundred million miles of motor vehicle travel, for 1933 and 1948, respectively.

The 1953 injury accident rate in Pennsylvania was 146 accidents per hundred million miles of motor vehicle travel, approximately two-thirds as great as the rate, 218, for the year 1932. For the years shown on Chart III, the highest rate, 252, appears for the year 1933, and the lowest rate, 135 injury accidents per hundred million miles of vehicle travel, for the year 1949. Rates showing persons injured generally parallel those showing injury accidents. The highest of these rates is shown for the year 1933, the lowest for the year 1949, and the 1953 rate of 225 persons injured per hundred million miles of vehicle travel was about two-thirds of the 1932 rate of 343.

[6] Data are available for computation of each of these rates on a vehicle travel mileage basis for the years 1932 to 1953, inclusive. Although all rates, other than fatality rates and fatal accident rates, are usually expressed in numbers per hundred thousand miles of vehicle travel, they are expressed in Chart III in numbers per hundred million miles of vehicle travel to facilitate comparisons among all rates. Data in Chart III are shown in tabular form in Appendix A, Table A-4.

Taking into account all deaths attributable to 1953 motor vehicle accidents (whether death occurred during or subsequent to 1953), the motor vehicle accident fatality rate in Pennsylvania was 5.2 deaths per hundred million miles of vehicle travel—the lowest annual Pennsylvania traffic accident fatality rate.[7]

The 1953 fatal accident rate in Pennsylvania was 4.7 fatal accidents per hundred million miles of vehicle travel—also the lowest annual rate during the twenty-two year time period. The highest fatality rate, 15.8 deaths per hundred million miles of vehicle travel, is shown in Chart III for the year 1932, while the highest fatal accident rate, 14.6, is shown for the years 1932 and 1933. Data for fatal traffic accidents and traffic fatalities for the year 1929 (not shown in Chart III) indicate higher rates than those noted above. It is estimated that in 1929 the fatality rate and the fatal accident rate in Pennsylvania were 18.7 fatalities and 17.7 fatal accidents per hundred million miles of vehicle travel. Comparison of these data with the 1953 rates of 5.2 and 4.6, respectively, shows that the likelihood of occurrence of a fatal traffic accident or a traffic fatality was slightly more than one quarter as great in 1953 as in 1929.

Increases in rates for all traffic accidents and property-damage accidents, in conjunction with decreases in rates for traffic deaths and injuries, suggest that the relative importance of factors resopsible for motor vehicle accidents has changed over the years.

Part II

CURRENT ACCIDENT-PREVENTION PRACTICE AND FACTORS RESPONSIBLE FOR TRAFFIC ACCIDENTS

Traffic accidents are caused by driver, vehicle, and road factors, singly or in combination. Driver factors are critical in the vast majority of highway accidents.

In hazardous situations, accidents may be averted if drivers are able, within available time, to recognize potential dangers and to select and effect safe courses of action. Even drivers who ordinarily react adequately may operate a vehicle dangerously when under stress.

Recognizing dangerous situations and selecting safe courses of action depend upon aptitudes for, and experience or training in, vehicle operation. For example, a driver proceeding upon an icy highway may precipitate an accident because of lack of aptitude—poor visual acuity, comparatively long reaction time, or insufficient mental alertness to interpret actions of other drivers and road and weather conditions. Similarly, the driver may precipitate an accident because of lack of relevant experience or training—a sudden skid may confront him with a situation which he has never before experienced or which he has never been trained to meet successfully.

Some accidents are ordinarily unavoidable—loss of a wheel while a car is in motion (vehicle factor) or passage on to a soft spot of a rain-soaked, but otherwise firm, highway shoulder (road factor) may generate situations so hazardous that accidents cannot be prevented. Further, involvement in certain types of collision accidents resulting from the action of other motor vehicle operators may also be unavoidable.

[7] Motor vehicle accident fatality rates in the United States by states, for the years 1951, 1952, and 1953, are shown in Appendix A, Table A-6.

Traffic safety programs dealing with road, vehicle, and driver factors may affect the number or the severity of highway accidents, or both. For example, improving the alignment of highways may tend to reduct the number of accidents occurring thereon; the use of safety glass in automobiles may decrease the severity of injuries; and the proper training of drivers to meet potentially dangerous situations may tend to reduce both the number and severity of accidents.

CURRENT HIGHWAY SAFETY MEASURES

Current Commonwealth accident-prevention practice includes measures which deal with each of the three accident factors—driver, vehicle, and road. Among such measures are the following:

The Road.—In its accident-prevention program the Pennsylvania Department of Highways utilizes safety warning devices and highway markers on both new and existing highways. Field forces in each of the highway districts, in conjunction with central office forces, provide for regular attention to traffic-control improvements to enhance traffic safety.

New highways are engineered for safe traffic flows through improved gradients, alignments, lane separators, and lane and berm designs, taking into account contemporary characteristics of vehicle design and operation. Integrated with the foregoing programs for the provision of safe highways within the Commonwealth are other programs applicable to special situations, such as the program for elimination of railway grade crossings.

Current administrative practice in Pennsylvania does not provide for regular reporting by the Bureau of Highway Safety of the Department of Revenue to the Department of Highways of road defect statements contained in operators' accident reports.

The Vehicle.—The periodic examination of all vehicles registered within the Commonwealth is required under the provisions of Act No. 263, Session of 1931 (1931, June 22, P. L. 751), as amended. This inspection program tends to keep from the roads of the Commonwealth potentially dangerous vehicles. Further, Pennsylvania statutes deal with many automotive safety devices—for example, safety glass is the subject of Act No. 264, Session of 1933 (1933, May 31, P. L. 1088), and four-wheel brakes are the subject of Act No. 355, Session of 1935 (1935, July 16, P. L. 1056). Pennsylvania law requires that minimum standards for certain automotive equipment be established by the Department of Revenue and that, for use in the Commonwealth, such items of equipment be approved as safe by the department.

Engineering improvements in automobiles and commercial vehicles tend to reduce numbers and severity of highway accidents. Among these improvements are all-steel roofs, lowered centers of gravity, and hydraulic and air brakes.

The Driver.—An applicant for a Pennsylvania driver's license must have his vision tested, undergo a driving examination, and give evidence that he is familiar with the rules of the road before he may be granted the privilege of operating a motor vehicle in the Commonwealth. Although semiannual inspections of vehicles are required in Pennsylvania, periodic examinations of motor vehicle operators are not required. Further, operators of varying driving skills are not accorded differential privileges. The driver whose abilities are such that it would be dangerous for him to exceed 30 miles per hour may be permitted to drive as rapidly as the driver of greater ability.

Operators' permits may be revoked or suspended for cause by the Secretary of Revenue. And, at the discretion of the secretary, operators may be subject to re-examination.

In certain of the public schools within the Commonwealth, driver training courses are offered.[1] In 1953, this program, together with the re-examination program, affected but 0.8 percent of the 4,316,654 licensed Pennsylvania operators. In addition to these specific accident-prevention activities, general highway safety publicity programs are conducted by the Commonwealth.

Suspensions and revocations of operators' permits, primarily a law-enforcement activity rather than a highway safety program, have not prevented increases in numbers of motor vehicle accidents. Numbers of motor vehicle accidents and suspensions and revocations of operators' permits for the years 1950 to 1953, inclusive, were as follows:

Year	Number of Motor Vehicle Accidents	No. of Suspensions and Revocations of Operators' Permits
(1)	(2)	(3)
1950	116,139	32,950
1951	123,088	43,268
1952	126,820	51,652
1953	129,791	57,136

Frequencies of Road, Vehicle, and Driver Factors in Highway Accidents

The relative importance of road factors in highway accidents is, in some measure, indicated by numbers of road defects at places of accidents. It should be noted that the existence of a road defect at the place of an accident does not necessarily mean that the road defect was the sole cause of, or a significant contributing factor in, the accident. Road defect data are available for the years 1950 through 1953 only. The reported numbers of road defects at places of accidents as percents of total numbers of accidents during these years were as follows:

1950	7.2 percent
1951	6.6 percent
1952	7.3 percent
1953	7.4 percent

Although many driver failures at times of accidents are not violations of Pennsylvania law, reported numbers of driver violations of the provisions of the Vehicle Code at times of accidents may be used as an approximate measure in estimating driver factors in traffic accidents. Similarly, a rough measure of the importance of vehicle factors is the reported number of identifiable vehicle defects at times of accidents.

The effectiveness of accident-prevention programs directed to drivers compared with the effectiveness of programs dealing with vehicles is indicated in Chart IV.[2] Reported vehicle defects as percents of total numbers of accidents declined from 22.63 percent to 3.92 percent over the years 1932 to 1953. For the comparable time period, reported driver violations as percents of total numbers of accidents increased from 58.18 percent in 1932 to 92.50 percent in 1953.

Part III

EFFECTIVE TRAFFIC SAFETY PROGRAMS

Effective approaches to problems of accident reduction require controlled observations of accidents and analyses of the operation of driver, vehicle, and road factors in all significant traffic situations. Only in the light of information developed from such observations and analyses can valid comparisons of the efficiency of alternate highway safety programs be made.

Adequate observation and anlysis procedures are more frequently employed with respect to vehicle and road factors than with respect to driver factors, although, in the vast majority of traffic accidents, driver factors are critical.

Examples of effective approaches relating to roads and vehicles are provided by highway design standards and by motor vehicle inspection systems. The geometric design standards for Pennsylvania highways (including maximum gradients and curvatures and required widths and numbers of traffic lanes) reflect size and power characteristics of vehicles and driving habits of operators and are calculated to provide for the safe and unimpeded flow of traffic. Pennsylvania's motor vehicle inspection system is designed to prevent accidents caused by faulty vehicle equipment. Before 1932, inspections were limited to light and brake equipment of vehicles and were not made at regular intervals. Observations of the frequency of faulty vehicle equipment in traffic accidents led, in 1932, to the regular inspection of all significant safety equipment of all Pennsylvania vehicles. In this connection, it may be observed that 9,281 vehicle defects at times of accidents were reported in 1932, and 5,092 in 1953. During these same two years, the numbers of traffic accidents were 41,004 and 129,791, respectively.

A similar observation and analysis approach to driver factor problems, although used in safety studies of commercial transportation companies,[1] is not currently used by the Commonwealth.

Driver factors are the physical and mental traits associated with aptitudes for, and skill in, vehicle operation. Deficiencies in aptitudes or skills frequently lead to traffic accidents.

Required Accident Facts and Currently Available Data

Precision in accident observations is necessary for effective approaches to accident-reduction problems. Accurate information on a sample basis could be provided by trained personnel through prompt and uniform accident investigations and uniform driver testing. Current accident report information is frequently inaccurate[2]

Information gathered by Commonwealth highway safety agencies relates to accident-producing factors in the case of vehicles (defective brakes, tires, steering mechanism, and lights, among others) and roads (defective shoulders, holes and ruts or bumps, and loose material on roadway surface, among others), but do not relate to accident-producing factors in the case of drivers. Among factors which appear to determine driver aptitudes and skills in vehicle operation are:

1. Eyesight
a. Visual acuity (ability to see fine detail)
b. Phoria (vertical and horizontal coordination of the eyes)
c. Depth perception
d. Color perception
2. Hearing
3. Complex reaction time
4. Glare recovery
5. Intelligence
6. Emotional stability, self-sufficiency, and dominance
7. Mechanical comprehension.

Regular accident investigations and reports by Commonwealth highway safety agencies are inadequate with respect to these factors, among others. For example, not included on the accident report form or generally determined by test are data relating to vision, hearing, reaction time, and amount of driver training or driver experience in terms of familiarity with vehicle, road, and traffic conditions similar to those in accident situations.

Among information currently collected by Commonwealth highway safety agencies for drivers involved in accidents are sex, age, occupation, years of driving experience, violations of Motor Vehicle Code at time of accident, and "condition."

Data on years of driving experience, reported by operators involved in accidents, are currently tabulated by Commonwealth highway safety agencies to provide several classifications for experience of less than one year, but only one classification for experience of one year or more. The vast majority of drivers involved in accidents fall in the latter category. Among so-called experience classifications is "out-of-state driver," which relates to residence rather than experience.

Categories provided for reporting "condition" of driver are: "had been drinking," "sick," "very tired," "apparently asleep," "body defects," "inattentive," "no apparent defect," "not stated," and "blinded by headlights." Although these items reflect physical and mental aptitudes for vehicle operation and experience and training in vehicle operation, none represents a single measurable element.

Cataloguing driver violations of provisions of the Vehicle Code, although of value for enforcement purposes, does not provide a precise basis for inferences on accident causes. Not separately listed as one of twenty-one violation categories provided on accident report forms is violation of the stopped school bus law. (Act No. 559, Session of 1949 [1949, May 26, P. L. 1884] provides that, outside of business or residental districts, drivers approaching a stopped school bus shall stop their vehicles and keep them stationary until the bus resumes motion or until the bus driver signals other operators to proceed.)

With respect to drivers' occupations, classifications used in certain cases are so broad that valid inferences cannot be drawn from accident data. For example, one occupational category includes both laborers and truck drivers. It is almost certain that accident involvement of these two groups is different.

Development of Effective Accident-Reduction Programs and Evaluation of Alternate Highway Safety Measures

Effective accident-reduction programs must be based on information relating to drivers involved in accidents and drivers as a whole. Specifically, controlled observations of accident situations taken in conjunction with data showing general levels of aptitudes and skills of drivers as a whole are the bases for inferences concerning aptitude and skill deficiencies which generate significant numbers of traffic accidents.

For valid comparisons of accident involvement for groups of drivers having different attributes (levels of aptitudes and skills or physical characteristics associated with them), accident rates must be computed in a manner which takes into account differences in numbers of drivers or accident exposure (for example, miles driven). For these rate computations, reliable estimates of the bases (numbers of operators or miles driven) are needed.

Current data are inadequate with respect to both levels of aptitudes and skills and valid estimates of bases necessary for rate computation.[3] Among information currently compiled are tabulations showing numbers of drivers involved in accidents, by age and sex groups. Although it is reasonable to expect that there are differences in chance of accident involvement among different sex and age groups of Pennsylvania drivers, lack of reliable data relating to numbers of drivers and miles driven (exposure) makes computation of meaningful rates impossible. Currently available Commonwealth data are not adequate to establish valid ratios of accident chance for any age or sex groups. For example, the chance of involvement in a fatal accident for all drivers is computed as follows (1953 data):

$$= .000472 \text{ or } 47 \text{ per hundred thousand licensed operators}$$

[2] Comparison of a sample of 100 operators' reports of non-fatal accidents with investigation reports of the Pennsylvania State Police (who investigate approximately 20 percent of all accidents occurring in the state) showed that all 100 operators' reports were to some extent inconsistent with police reports and that in 94 the inconsistencies related to the manner in which accident occurred, resulting injuries, or operator's experience. Of these 94 reports, 44 contained less than 5 such inconsistencies, 43 contained 5 but less than 10, and 7 contained 10 or more.

[3] In 1953, the Bureau of Highway Safety, Pennsylvania Department of Revenue, conducted an exploratory study with a view to developing bases for rate computations. However, since information for more than half (52.2 percent) of the drivers included in the study sample was not obtained, the degree to which the characteristics of the respondent group represent the characteristics of Pennsylvania motor vehicle operators as a whole—of critical importance for valid estimates of rates bases—cannot be accurately specified.

The chance of involvement in a fatal accident for drivers under age 25 would be computed similarly:

$$\text{Chance of involvement in fatal accident for drivers under 25} = \frac{\text{Number of drivers under 25 involved in fatal accidents}}{\text{Total number of licensed operators under 25}}$$

Chart V shows that valid computations of chance of fatal accident involvement for drivers aged 25 and over and drivers under age 25 cannot be made because reliable estimates of total numbers of operators in these groups are not available. Consequently, differences between groups and probable changes in chance of involvement cannot be analyzed for the time period shown. Chart VI shows that this is also true with respect to men and women drivers.[4]

Accident involvement rates on a mileage basis are computed by dividing numbers of drivers involved in accidents (as counted by Commonwealth highway safety agencies) by total vehicle travel mileage estimates for Pennsylvania as provided by the United States Bureau of Public Roads and the National Safety Council. The example below illustrates this computation for all highway accidents for the years 1953.

$$= \frac{237{,}448}{31{,}412 \text{ million}}$$

$$= 756 \text{ drivers involved in accidents per hundred million miles of vehicle travel}$$

Comparable computations cannot be made for sex and age groups and numerous other relevant groups because, although numbers of persons involved in accidents in different groups are tabulated, reliable mileage estimates for these groups are not available.

Chart VII illustrates this with reference to drivers aged 25 and over and drivers under age 25, and Chart VIII, with reference to men and women drivers.[5] Although for each of these age and sex groups numbers of drivers involved in traffic accidents are known, reliable estimates of miles driven by all operators in the groups are lacking.

Meaningful rates for operators grouped according to relevant accident-producing characteristics (aptitudes and skills or associated traits) are needed to identify those driver factors which generate significant numbers of traffic accidents and to analyze interrelations between driver factors and vehicle and road factors. Changes in the incidence of accident-generating factors (as shown by such rates) would provide both criteria of efficiency of current examination and training programs and bases for selection among alternate highway safety measures.

Effective and efficient programs dealing with driver factors—critical in the vast majority of traffic accidents—are essential if the accident toll on Pennsylvania highways is to be materially reduced.

Appendix B

DRIVER TRAINING IN PENNSYLVANIA PUBLIC SCHOOLS

Teaching of safe driving of motor vehicles in the public schools is authorized by Act No. 475, Session of 1947 (1947, June 28, P. L. 1109, as amended).

Act No. 499, Session of 1951 (1951 [January 8, 1952], P. L. 1859), increased the motor vehicle learner's permit fee from $2.00 to $4.00 and provided that as much of the fee received for each permit as necessary, but not more than $2.00, should be appropriated to the Department of Public Instruction for expenses in carrying out a standardized program of driver education and for making payments to school districts complying with the standardized program.

During the registration year 1953, the number of learners' permits issued was 425,612; during 1954, the number issued was 401,006. In other words, about $850,000 in receipts for the year 1953 and about $800,000 in receipts for the year 1954 were available for both administration of the driver-training program and subsidy payments to school districts having approved driver-training programs.

Commonwealth reimbursement to a given district is calculated by multiplying the amount of available funds by the ratio of average daily membership of pupils over 15 years of age in the driver-training program in the given district to the total average daily membership of pupils over 15 years of age in driver-training courses in all school districts of the Commonwealth. However, under the statute ,payments may not exceed the sum of $10.00 for each such pupil per school year.

During the school year 1953-54, average daily membership in approved driver-education programs was 25,448, and Commonwealth reimbursement on account of driver-education programs for the school year 1953-54 amounted to $254,480, and 18.7 percent increase from the 1952-53 reimbursement of $214,330. Total numbers of pupils in driver-education programs (in classroom courses, only, and in classroom and practice-driving courses) and Commonwealth reimbursement for approved driver-training programs for the school year 1953-54 are shown, by county, in Appendix Table B.

Reliable data for evaluation of this program in terms of estimated reductions in numbers of accidents are not currently available.

LETTER OF TRANSMITTAL

To the Members of the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania:

House Concurrent Resolution No. 79, Session of 1953, directed the Joint State Government Commission to study and investigate public and private pensions, pension funds, and pension plans. Pursuant to the authority vested in the Commission by the Act of 1937, July 1, P. L. 2460, as amended 1939, June 26, P. L. 1084, the Commission expanded the scope of the study to include temporary non-occupational disability plans and medical expense plans. The report on the study is presented herewith.

Under authority granted by the Act of 1943, March 8, P. L. 13, Section 1, the Commission created a subcommittee to facilitate the study. On behalf of the Commission, the cooperation of the subcommittee is gratefully acknowledged.

The Commission wishes to express its appreciation to the Pennsylvania Department of Labor and Industry, Bureau of Employment Security, for furnishing follow-up services in connection with the Commission's survey of Pennsylvania employers and for making special compilations of data related to the study. The cooperation of the employers and unions who furnished information relating to benefit plans covering their employes and members is also much appreciated.

BAKER ROYER, Chairman

Joint State Government Commission
Capitol Building
Harrisburg, Pennsylvania.

PREFACE

Responsibility for income maintenance has traditionally rested largely with the individual. However, over the past few decades, group income-maintenance measures, such as workmen's compensation, unemployment compensation, pension and disability plans, and public assistance, have become increasingly important.

For convenience of reference, group income-maintenance plans may be divided into two categories: plans calculated to provide for income maintenance upon permanent disability or retirement and plains designed to provide for income maintenance in cases of temporary disability or unemployment.

In the first category belong such measures as public and private pension plans. The Commission reported previously on selected public retirement systems and upon the income position of Pennsylvania's aged in the following reports: School and State Employes' Retirement Systems, Session of 1949; Commonwealth Retirement Systems: Structure and Costs, Session of 1951; and Sixty-Five, A Report Concerning Pennsylvania's Aged, Session of 1953.

In the second category belong such measures as workmen's compensation, unemployment compensation, and private and public disability plans. Prior Commission investigations in this area have included the following: Partial Unemployment Compensation Benefits, Session of 1951, and Occupational Hazards to State Employes, Session of 1951.

The public assistance program provides for payments to permanently or temporarily disabled or unemployed persons who meet eligibility requirements. The Commission reported upon this program in Public Assistance in Pennsylvania, Session of 1951.

The present report deals exclusively with group income-maintenance plans; no attempt was made to investigate income-maintenance measures taken by individuals. An investigation of individual income-maintenance measures involves the problem of approximating the present value of assets likely to be available in the case of disability or on retirement.

Specifically, the report presents data relating to: (1) coverage of, and expected benefits from, various pension programs effective in Pennsylvania, (2) coverage, elements, and structure of private employment pension plans, (3) coverage, elements, and structure of temporary nonoccupational disability income-maintenance plans, and (4) coverage of medical expense plans.

INTRODUCTION

PENSION PROGRAMS AND PLANS

Pension plans have been established by private companies, unions, federal, state, and local governments, and nonprofit organizations for their employes or members. In addition, the federal government administers: (1) the federally financed veterans' pension program, (2) the employer-employe financed Old Age and Survivors' Insurance (OASI) program, and (3) the employer-employe financed Railroad Retirement program.

Data relating to pension plans have been obtained by means of a survey of Pennsylvania adults and a survey of Pennsylvania employers. Although information relating to coverage by public pension plans and some industrial pension plans is available, no previous attempt has been made to determine the extent of overlapping coverage for Pennsylvanians. Similarly, although the characteristics of some public and private pension plans are well known, no detailed analysis based upon a representative cross section of employes has heretofore been made of the elements, structure, and frequency of coverage of private employment pension plans in Pennsylvania.

SURVEY OF PENNSYLVANIA ADULTS

In March, 1954, a survey was made (on the basis of a sample of households) of Pennsylvanians aged 25 or over who, in 1953, had incomes of $5,000 or less. Both members of a married couple were excluded from the survey if either had an income in excess of $5,000 in 1953; a wife was included regardless of age if her husband was aged 25 or over.[1] On the basis of the survey, estimates were made of coverage, overlapping coverage, and expected benefits for adults in the age and income groups specified above.

COVERAGE

About 69 percent of the adults were covered by one or more types of pension programs. However, 91 percent of the men were covered, as compared to 51 percent of the women. Thirty-two percent of the women, while not covered by a pension plan, were wives of covered persons. Nearly 93 percent of the married couples, as compared to 87 percent of the other male adults and 64 percent of the other female adults, had some type of pension coverage. In terms of number of persons covered, Old Age and Survivors' Insurance was the most important program for each of the above groups.

[See Tables 1 to 18.]

EXPECTED PENSIONS

The average (median) expected pension, excluding veterans' pensions, for all adults reporting total expected pensions was about $68 per month. The average (median) expected pension for married couples was about $129; for other male adults, about $98; and for other female adults, about $54.

About 39 percent of the male adults were veterans. Of these, 10 percent were receiving veterans' pensions and 13 percent expected to receive pensions at some future date, while 62 percent did not expect to receive pensions. The relatively high percentage of veterans not expecting to receive a pension may be due, in part, to unawareness of some that these benefits are available and expectations of others that they will not meet eligibility requirements.

The size of a veteran's pension for a service-connected disability depends on the degree of disability. Eligibility for a veteran's pension in the case of nonservice-connected disability depends on the war during which the veteran served, age, degree of disability, employability, and income.[2] For example, an unmarried veteran of World War I or II or the Korean action, aged 65 or over, who has a nonservice-connected permanent disability of at least 10 percent and who is unable to obtain regular employment, is eligible for a pension if his income is $1,400 per year or less ($2,700 per year or less in the case of a veteran who is married or has dependent children).

[1] For detail, see Appendix B.

[2] Public Law 356, Eighty-second Congress, May 23, 1952; Public Law 698, Eighty-third Congress, August 28, 1954; and Veterans Administration Regulations.

Pensions for nonservice-connected disibilities begin at $66.15 per month for veterans under age 65, and are $78.75 per month for veterans aged 65 or over—except that, regardless of age, a veteran who requires regular aid and attendance or who is helpless or blind receives $135.45 per month.

[See Tables 19 to 24.]

SURVEY OF PENNSYLVANIA EMPLOYERS

On the basis of information from a sample of firms employing Pennsylvanians covered by Unemployment Compensation (exclusive of nonmanufacturing firms with less than 10 employes which became employers subsequent to March, 1952), estimates were made of current employment pension plan coverage in 1953, by characteristics of the plans, by industry.[3]

COVERAGE

About 35 percent of the Pennsylvania employes were covered by private employment pension plans. Coverage ranged from 1.2 percent in firms employing between 1 and 9 Pennsylvanians to 80 percent in firms employing 5,000 or more Pennsylvanians. Among industry groups, coverage ranged from 2.2 percent in construction to 87 percent in primary metals.

Although some private employment pension plans have been in operation for more than 50 years, 64 percent of the employes covered in 1953 were members of plans initiated during or after World War II.

[See Tables 25 to 29.]

Elements of Pension Plans and Their Magnitudes

The following basic elements enter into the structure of a pension plan:

1. Eligibility requirements for membership
2. Eligibility requirements for benefits
3. Amounts and duration of benefits
4. Contribution arrangement
5. Method of financing
6. Cost.

Although it is helpful to discuss these elements separately, it should be noted that a change in one is likely to produce changes in some, or all, of the others.

Eligibility requirements for membership.—Under some plans, individuals become eligible for membership at the time of employment. Under other plans, membership is available only to employes who meet certain requirements relating to such factors as age, earnings, years of service, union status, etc.

[See Table 31.]

Eligibility requirements for benefits.—Eligibility for a normal retirement benefit is typically determined on the basis of age and/or service. About 79 percent of the employes with pension coverage were members of plans with a normal retirement age of 65; about 35 percent, of plans with a normal retirement age of 65 and a service requirement of 14 to 18 years. Ten percent were members of plans with a normal retirement age of 60 and a service requirement of 19 to 23 years.

Many plans provide for alternative retirement arrangements: late retirement, subsequent to normal retirement age; early retirement, prior to normal retirement age; and disability retirement because of permanent disability. Fifty-four percent of the employes with pension coverage were members of plans permitting late retirement provided employes were able to perform their jobs, and an additional 29 percent were members of plans requiring special permission for late retirement. About 42 percent of the employes with pension coverage were members of plans permitting early retirement, usually after attainment of a specified age and/or completion of a minimum period of service. About 69 percent of the employes with pension coverage were members of plans having provisions for disability retirement.

Another benefit provided by some plans is the vesting of (crediting the employe with) employer contributions if the employe leaves prior to retiremnt. About 36 percent of the employes with pension coverage were members of plans providing for vesting of employer contributions, usually on the conditions that specified service and/or age requirements be met or on the condition that the employe remain in the same industry.

[See Tables 32 to 37.]

Amounts and duration of benefits.—Generally, benefits available at normal retirement age are fixed, vary with length of service or with earnings, or are computed on the basis of both earnings and length of service. The average (median) pension for employes with 25 years of service and average annual earnings of $3,000, who were covered by plans providing for benefits calculated with reference to primary Social Security benefits, was approximately $101 per month (including Social Security benefits). The average (median) pension for such employes who were covered by plans providing benefits independent of Social Security was approximately $52 per month.

Late retirement benefits may be the same as, or larger than, normal retirement benefits. About 49 percent of the employes with pension coverage were members of plans under which late retirement benefits were higher than normal retirement benefits.

Pensions provided by many plans depend on earnings and length of service, or on earnings alone. In plans of this type, earnings may be averaged over such time periods as: (1) the entire length of service, (2) the final 5 or 10 years of service, or (3) the 5 or 10 years of highest earnings.

Most plans provide for benefits payable over the remaining life of the retiree; under some plans, benefit payment options are available. About 49 percent of the employes with pension coverage were members of plans paying benefits for life ceasing at death with no survivorship option, and 32 percent were members of plans paying benefits for life with a survivorship option.

[See Tables 38 to 47.]

Contribution arrangement.—Contributions to meet pension liabilities are made by the employe directly, by the employer, or by both. About 77 percent of the employes with pension coverage were members of plans in which contributions were made solely by the employer.

[See Table 36.]

Method of financing.—The accrued liability for pension benefits payable in the future is fully funded, partially funded, or unfunded. Typically, the liability is funded either through payments into a trust fund or through payment of premiums to an insurance company.

Under a fully funded plan, liability attributable to "past service"—that is, service rendered before the plan became effective—has been completely funded, and liability attributable to "future service"—that is, service rendered after the plan became effective—is funded as it accrues. Typically, partially funded plans provide for either (1) funding future service liability as it accrues and funding past service liability over a period of not more than thirty years, subsequent to the establishment of the plan, or (2) funding the liability for pension payments on account of a given employe when that employe retires (terminal funding). Under unfunded plans, benefit payments are made out of current funds.

Insured plans may be fully funded or partially funded, depending on the insurance contract and on the length of time the plan has been in operation. The degree of funding—and the solvency—of a plan financed on a royalty basis (e.g., percent of payroll, cents per hour, or cents per unit of production) depend upon the relationship among royalty payments, benefit payments, and accrued liability, and the length of time over which this relationship persists.

About 15 percent of the employes with pension coverage were members of insured plans, and 15 percent were members of plans financed on a royalty basis. In addition, 10 percent were members of fully funded plans using a trust fund, 41 percent were members of partially funded plans using a trust fund, and 6 percent were members of unfunded plans.

[See Table 48.]

Cost.—If benefits and other elements of a pension plan are specified, estimates can be made of anticipated cost. How closely this anticipated cost will approximate the actual cost depends upon the accuracy with which such factors as membership, employe turnover, and wage and salary levels are predicted. Alternatively, if cost is specified (in terms of dollars, a percentage of wages, or a charge per unit of production), estimates can be made of anticipated benefits. The extent to which these anticipated benefits are realizable depends not only on the employe characteristics but also on the predictability of the wages or output in terms of which cost is defined. At least 15 percent of the employes with pension coverage were members of plans which specified both benefits and costs; under such plans, the extent to which the specified benefits and costs can be maintained depends upon the accuracy with which the relevant factors are predicted.

Whenever benefits are specified, a given degree of funding can be maintained only if contributions and/or benefits are adjusted in accordance with unanticipated changes in the relevant factors.

Relationship between Cost and Other Elements

The cost of a retirement annuity for any individual per hour of service rendered depends upon the price of the annuity purchased at retirement age, the length of service, and the interest rate—that is, the rate earnable on accumulating assets.

The price of a retirement annuity is the amount of money which is required to purchase, at retirement age, an annual pension payable over a specified period of time. The price of an annuity payable over the remaining life of the retiree depends on the magnitude of the annual payment, life expectancy, and the discount rate—that is, the rate used to determine the present value of a series of payments due in the future.[4] For example, at age 65, at a discount rate of 3 percent, the price of a single life annuity of $600 is $6,381 for a male and $7,312 for a female. The prices of the two annuities differ because, at present, the life expectancy at age 65 of a male is 13.0 years, whereas the life expectancy of a female is 15.4 years.[5] The higher the retirement age, the shorter the life expectancy, and, hence, the lower the price of the annuity.[6] At a higher discount rate, the price of the annuity will be lower. If the discount rate in the above example were 4 percent, the price of the annuity would be $5,991 for a man and $6,799 for a woman.

The provisions of the pension plan define length of service creditable for pension purposes, affect the price of an annuity through the benefit structure, and reflect the choice among available interest rates. These interrelations between cost and pension plan provisions are set forth below.

Cost and variations in benefits and creditable service.—Pension cost attributable to service rendered after a pension plan is initiated accrues as creditable service is rendered, regardless of the arrangements with respect to pension benefit payments or the distribution of pension contributions over time.[7]

The pension payable over the period of retirement may depend upon, or be independent of, the number of years of service. In either case, pension cost per hour during a given service year depends on the amount of the pension which is allocable to that service year and upon the proximity of the service year to the date of retirement. The closer a service year is to the date of retirement, the shorter the earnings period of assets available for pension purposes, and, therefore, the higher the hourly cost. A single life annuity of $30 allocable to each year of service, for a male retiring at age 65, costs 6.5 cents per hour (assuming 2,080 hours per year and an interest rate of 3 percent) during a year of service rendered 30 years before retirement, 8.7 cents per hour during a year of service rendered 20 years before retirement, and 11.8 cents per hour during a year of service rendered 10 years before retirement.

If the pension payable over the period of retirement is independent of the number of years of service, the amount attributable to a given service year depends on the total pension and the number of years of service rendered.

A minimum service requirement (or a maximum entry age, together with a minimum retirement age) tends to reduce cost by lengthening the period over which assets available for pension purposes earn interest. In addition, if the plan provides for a pension the magnitude of which is independent of years of service, a minimum service requirement, insofar as it increases the total number of years of service, reduces the cost during any one year.

Although the hourly pension cost for an employe in-

[4] In order to simplify this discussion, the following factors will not be considered: (a) administrative costs, (b) distribution of life durations about the life expectancy, and (c) periodicity with which pensions are paid.

[5] Statistical Bulletin (New York: Metropolitan Life Insurance Company, June, 1954), p. 4.

[6] However, the price remains unchanged if the plan provides for adjustment of the size of the annuity to reflect late retirement.

[7] Pension cost attributable to service rendered prior to the initiation of a pension plan accrues when the decision to establish the plan is made.

creases as retirement is approached, this cost may be financed by means of a constant contribution per hour of service. In the above example, an annuity of $30 per year for each year of service would call for a contribution of 9.7 cents per hour during each year of service on the assumption that an employe renders a total of 30 years of service, 11.4 cents per hour for 20 years of service, and 13.4 cents per hour for 10 years of service.

Cost and method of financing.—Liability for future pension payments may be met by transferring funds to a trust fund or to an insurance company and/or may be represented by assets available for use in the business. In the case of a fully funded plan, funds are transferred to a trust fund or to an insurance company as the pension liability accrues. In the case of a partially funded plan, only a portion of the pension liability is represented by funded obligations. In the case of an unfunded plan, no funds are transferred to a trust fund or an insurance company. The unfunded portion of accrued liability in any plan, other than a royalty-financed plan, may or may not be represented by assets available for use in the business. If the liability is represented by business assets, then (assuming a stable tax rate) whenever the rate of return, after tax, an additional business assets exceeds the rate of return on funded obligations, the cost associated with a given pension benefit increases as the fraction of the liability represented by funded obligations increases.[8] However, the probability that pension liabilities will be met tends to increase as the fraction of liabilities represented by funded obligations increases. In a royalty-financed plan, the unfunded portion of accrued liability generally is not represented by business assets, since each employer's obligation with respect to pension benefits is limited to the specified royalty contributions.

Relationship Between Contribution Arrangements and Vesting and Funding Provisions

Vesting provisions of contributory plans (to which employes contribute directly) and noncontributory plans typically differ as follows: Contributory plans provide for the return of employe contributions (often with interest) in case of termination of employment prior to retirement; in addition, these plans more frequently provide for vesting of employer contributions than do noncontributory plans. Of the members of contributory plans, 83 percent were covered by plans with some provision for vesting of employer contributions; the comparable fraction for members of noncontributory plans—including persons covered by royalty plans—was 31 percent.

[See Table 36.]

Funding provisions of contributory and noncontributory plans also differ. Nearly 49 percent of the members of contributory plans were covered by insured plans and 2.9 percent by plans financed on a royalty basis, as compared to 10 percent and 19 percent, respectively, of members of noncontributory plans. In addition, 19 percent of the members of contributory plans were covered by fully funded plans financed by means of a trust fund and less than .5 percent by terminally funded plans. The comparable percentages for members of noncontributory plans were 9 and 15 percent.

[See Table 49.]

Pension Plans, Government, and Selected Economic Factors

Both the federal government and the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania have established standards applying to elements of pension plans. In addition, the pattern of private pension plans is affected by the policies of the federal government relating to taxes, wage stabilization, labor, and Social Security; federal fiscal and monetary policies affect interest rates—and hence the earnings of pension funds—as well as the purchasing power of annuities.

Finally, it may be noted that some of the elements of pension plans are likely to affect the operation of economic factors, such as movement of labor and hiring practices.

These matters are discussed in more detail in Appendix A.

TEMPORARY NONOCCUPATIONAL DISABILITY PLANS

While the costs of pension plans covering large groups of persons may be used to estimate pension costs for groups not currently covered, a comparable situation does not obtain with respect to temporary nonoccupational disability costs. The physical, social, and economic characteristics of persons currently covered by temporary nonoccupational disability plans—factors which determine the costs of these plans—may differ considerably from the characteristics of the Pennsylvania labor force as a whole.

Temporary nonoccupational disability plans have been established by private companies, unions, federal, state, and local governments, and nonprofit organizations for their employes or members. Although the characteristics of some of these plans are well known, no detailed analysis based upon a representative cross section of employes has previously been made of the elements, structure, and frequency of coverage of these plans in Pennsylvania.

SURVEY OF PENNSYLVANIA EMPLOYERS

On the basis of the Commission's survey of firms employing Pennsylvanians covered by Unemployment Compensation (exclusive of non-manufacturing firms with less than 10 employes which became employers subsequent to March, 1952), estimates were made of temporary nonoccupational disability income-maintenance plan coverage in 1953, by characteristics of plans, by industry. In addition, the Commission obtained data on medical expense plan coverage in Pennsylvania.

Coverage

About 48 percent of the Pennsylvania employes were covered by some type of income-maintenance plan: 9 percent by "sick leave" plans, 37 percent by "part-pay" plans, and 1.9 percent by plans of unreported type.[1] Follow-up communication with some employers who did not originally report sick leave plans indicates that this type of coverage is more extensive than reflected by the estimates presented. Coverage under sick leave plans ranged from .4 percent of employes in firms employing between 1 and 9 Pennsylvanians to 15 percent in firms employing 5,000 or more Pennsylvanians. Among industry groups, coverage under sick leave plans ranged from 1.1 percent of employes in the mining industry to 37 percent in the finance, insurance, and real estate industry group.

[8] The returns on funded obligations of plans approved by the Internal Revenue Service are tax exempt.
The cost effect of a changing tax rate depends on the amounts and timing of the tax changes and the magnitudes of the two rates of return.

[1] Plans were classified as "sick leave" plans if they provided for payment of full wages or salary during at least part of the disability period; otherwise, they were classified as "part-pay" plans.

Coverage under part-pay plans ranged from .8 percent of employes in firms employing between 1 and 9 Pennsylvanians to 57.3 percent in firms employing 5,000 or more Pennsylvanians. Among industry groups, coverage under part-pay plans ranged from 4.3 percent of employes in the finance, insurance, and real estate industry group to 76 percent in the machinery, electrical, and transportation equipment industry group.

About 54 percent of the Pennsylvania employes were covered by medical expense plans in connection with their employment; coverage ranged from 10 percent in firms employing between 1 and 9 Pennsylvanians to 79 percent in firms employing between 500 and 999 Pennsylvanias. Among industry groups, coverage ranged from 15 percent of employes in the construction industry to 87 percent in the machinery, electrical, and transportation equipment industry group.

The remainder of the discussion on temporary nonoccupational disability will be concerned solely with part-pay plans. Although some part-pay plans have been in operation for more than 50 years, 57 percent of the employes covered in 1953 were members of plans initiated after World War II.

[See Tables 50 to 59.]

Elements of Disability Plans and Their Magnitudes

The following basic elements enter into the structure of a disability plan:

1. Eligibility requirements for membership
2. Eligibility requirements for benefits
3. Amounts and duration of benefits
4. Contribution arrangement
5. Method of financing
6. Cost.

Although it is helpful to discuss these elements separately, it should be noted that a change in one is likely to produce changes in some, or all, of the others.

Eligibility requirements for membership.—Eligibility for membership in party-pay plans depends upon length of service wage-salary compensation basis, union status, occupation, etc., singly or in combination. The most frequently occurring eligibility requirement was length of service. Of the employes who were members of part-pay plans, 43 percent were covered by plans requiring either three or six months of service to qualify for membership; 35 percent, by plans having a service requirement of less than three months; and 13 percent, by plans with no service requirement.

[See Table 60.]

Eligibility requirements for benefits.—Of the employes who were members of part-pay plans, 71 percent were covered by plans requiring a seven-day waiting period before benefits in case of illness were payable, and 8 percent, by plans requiring a three-day waiting period. Frequently, no waiting period was required in the case of absence caused by an accident.

[See Table 61.]

Amounts and duration of benefits.—Benefits payable under part-pay plans are fixed in amount or depend on such factors as normal earnings (with or without a fixed minimum or maximum), type of job, and cause of disability (sickness or accident). Of the employes who were members of part-pay plans:

a. 50 percent were covered by plans specifying a fixed benefit amount, and 25 percent were covered by plans under which the amount of benefit depended on earnings with specified minimum and maximum benefit payments.

b. 30 percent were covered by plans providing for a minimum weekly benefit between $23 and $27.

c. 40 percent were covered by plans providing for a maximum weekly benefit between $23 and $32.

d. 41 percent were covered by plans with a maximum benefit duration of 13 weeks, and about 43 percent were members of plans with a maximum benefit duration of 26 weeks.[2]

[See Tables 62 to 65.]

Contribution arrangement.—Contributions under part-pay plans are made by the employe directly, by the employer, or by both. About 50 percent of the employers with part-pay plan coverage were members of plans for which contributions were made solely by the employer, and 41 percent were members of plans for which contributions were made both directly by the employe and by the employer.

[See Table 66.]

Method of financing.—Part-pay temporary disability plans are insured or noninsured. About 64 percent of the employes with this coverage were members of insured plans; about 31 percent were members of noninsured plans. An employe leaving his employer generally loses his coverage (unless he is a member of a royalty plan and remains in the industry segment, area, or union for which the plan provides coverage).

[See Table 67.]

Cost.—If benefits and other elements of a part-pay temporary diasibility plan are specified, estimates can be made of anticipated cost. How closely this anticipated cost will approximate the actual cost depends on the accuracy with which such factors as membership, frequency of disabilities, and duration of disabilities are predicted. Alternatively, if cost is specified (in terms of dollars, a percentage of wages, or a charge per unit of production), estimates can be made of anticipated benefits. The extent to which these anticipated benefits are realizable depends not only on the employe characteristics mentioned above, but also on the predictability of the wages or output in terms of which cost is defined.

Relationship Between Cost and Other Elements

The cost of a temporary nonoccupational disability plan depends, in part, on the age distribution of the employes

[2] Many plans either restricted benefits to six weeks in cases of pregnancy or illness arising therefrom or provided no benefits in such cases. Since follow-up communications with employers indicate that this information was underreported, it is not presented in detail.

covered by the plan. The proportion of persons in the labor force with a disabiling illness or condition tends to increase with age after age 35.[3] Consequently, the cost of a plan paying a flat benefit increases with increases in the number of older workers covered by the plan.

The cost of the disability plan depends also upon its elements.

Since a service requirement tends to eliminate temporary employes from disability coverage, it operates to reduce both the number of benefit payments and the administrative expense. This may be an important cost-reducing factor in industries where employe turnover is high.

A waiting period before sickness benefits are payable reduces the cost of a disability plan, since no payments are made for short-term disabilities and the administrative cost resulting from many short-period claims is eliminated.

For a given number of days of compensable absence from work, the cost of the disability plan increases in direct proportion to the amount of the benefit; it also increases as maximum duration of benefits increases.

SURVEY OF TEMPORARY DISABILITY LAWS IN OTHER STATES

The statutes of four states—California, New Jersey, New York, and Rhode Island—require that specified groups of employes be covered by state or private nonoccupational disability benefit plans.

Benefits became payable under the Rhode Island plan in April, 1943; under the California plan in December, 1946; under the New Jersey plan in January, 1949; and under the New York legislation in July, 1950. The principal provisions of the statutes of each of these states, as of January, 1954, are outlined below.

Except for the fact that individuals could elect not to participate in the plans on religious grounds, coverage under the California, New Jersey, and Rhode Island statutes was identical with the coverage under the unemployment compensation statutes of these states; coverage under the New York legislation was closely related to the unemployment compensation coverage. All of the states under review provided for a seven-day waiting period before benefits were payable; in California, the waiting period was waived in case of hospitalization. In each state, a relationship was established between workmen's compensation benefits and temporary disability benefits. The minimum weekly benefit provided for in each state was $10, and the maximum ranged from $25 in Rhode Island to $35 in California.

Rhode Island required that all employers insure with the state fund; the other states permitted employers to adopt private plans, provided such plans were approved by the state.

Individual workers can elect out on religious grounds.	Same as for unemployment insurance, except that individual workers can elect out on religious grounds.
Eligibilty for Benefits Definition of disability	Inability, because of physical or mental condition, to perform regular or customary work. No payments for any illness or injury caused by or arising in connection with pregnancy, up to 28 days after termination of pregnacy.	Total inability to perform duties of the employment, resulting from any accident or sickness not arising out of and in course of employment, or, if so, not compensable under workmen's compensation. No payments for any period of disability due to pregnancy, childbirth, miscarriage, or abortion.	Inability, because of injury or sickness not arising out of and in the course of employment, to perform regular duties of his employment or any other employment his employer offers him at his regular wages. No payments for any period of disability caused by or arising in connection with pregnancy, unless that period occurs after return to covered employment for at least two consecutive weeks following termination of pregnancy.	Inability, because of physical or mental condition, to perform regular or customary work. Payments for pregnancy are of limited duration.
Qualifying wages or employment	Thirty times weekly benefit amount or 1⅓ times high quarter wages in the base period, whichever is less, but not less than $300. Base period is unemployment insurance base period for those with unexpired unemployment insurance benefit year; first four of last five or six calendar quarters preceding disability for those without unexpired unemployment insurance benefit year.	Seventeen base weeks of employment in the 52 calendar weeks immediately preceding the calendar week in which the period of disability began. A base week is a week in which wages from one employer were $15 or more.	Four or more consecutive weeks of covered employment (or 25 days regular part-time employment) prior to commencement of disability.	Thirty times weekly benefit amount in last four calendar quarters preceding disability.

Waiting period .	Seven consecutive days of disability at beginning of each uninterrupted period of disability. No waiting period in case of hospitalization.	Seven consecutive days of disability at beginning of each uninterrupted period of disability.	Seven consecutive days of disability at beginning of each uninterrupted period of disability.	Seven consecutive days of disability in benefit year.
Disqualifications:
Employment ...	Persons who were unemployed and not registered at a public employment office for more than three months prior to disability, unless they can prove that the unemployment is due to disability and not to withdrawal from the labor market.	Persons who were out of covered employment more than two weeks prior to disability.	Persons who were out of covered employment more than four weeks prior to disability.
Workmen's Compensation	If receiving or entitled to receive workmen's compensation for same disability and week, not eligible for disability benefits unless workmen's compensation is less than disability; in that case, the difference is payable.	Not eligible for any period with respect to which workmen's compensation (other than benefits for a permanent disability previously incurred) is paid or payable.	Not eligible for any period with respect to which workmen's compensation (other than permanent partial benefits for a prior disability) is paid or payable.	Eligible for workmen's compensation and disability benefits combined up to 85 percent of average weekly wage on last job prior to sickness, provided combined payments do not exceed $53. No deduction for lump-sum payments of workmen's compensation or for workmen's compensation payments received after the period to which they relate.
Wages	Eligible even though receiving wages while not working, provided that benefits plus wages do not exceed 70 percent of wages piror to disability.	Eligible even though receiving wages while not working, provided that benefits plus wages do not exceed wages prior to disability.	No benefit payable for day if entitled to receive remuneration or maintenance from fund to which employer contributes in amount at least equal to benefits; does not include voluntary aid from employer.	Eligible even though receiving regular wages or part thereof while not working.
Size and Duration of Benefits
Weekly benefit amount	$10-35, based on schedule of high-quarter wages, plus hospital benefits of $10 a day for 12 days in any one benefit period.	$10-30 (⅔ of average weekly wage). Average wage determined by dividing wages from one employer during base weeks in eight weeks preceding disability by number of such base weeks. If this is less than average using all employment during last eight weeks, earnings from all employers are used.	$10-30 on basis of one-half average weekly wage in last eight weeks in covered employment prior to commencement of disability. If average is less than $10, weekly benefit is average wage.	$10-25 (1/20 of high-quarter wages rounded to nearest dollar.)

	CALIFORNIA	NEW JERSEY	NEW YORK	RHODE ISLAND
Duration of benefits	Uniform potential 26 weeks for any one disability benefit period, $260-910. Duration separate from unemployment insurance.	Thirteen to twenty-six weeks, $128-780, computed as lesser of 26 × weekly benefits or ¾ base weeks. Limit applies to benefits in any 12-consecutive-month period. Duration separate from unemployment insurance and from benefits as an unemployed, disabled worker.	Uniform potential 13 weeks in any 52 consecutive weeks, or for any single period of disability, $130 (or less if weekly benefit is less than $10)-$390. Duration separate from unemployment insurance.	Seven-plus to 26 weeks, $104-650, based on schedule of base period wages. Duration separate from unemployment insurance. Payments for pregnancy limited to 12 consecutive weeks to begin 6 weeks before and end 6 weeks after childbirth.
Financing
Method of insuring	Employers insured with State fund unless and until agency approval is given to private plan (insured or self-insured).	Employers insured with State fund unless and until agency approval is given to private plan (insured or self-insured).	Employers must arrange for benefit payments by purchasing a policy from an insurance company or from the State insurance fund, or by self-insurance.	All employers insured with the State fund.
Contributions ..	Employe tax of 1 percent of wages up to $3,000.	Workers covered by State plan pay .50 percent on wages up to $3,000 for temporary disability insurance and .25 percent for unemployment insurance; workers covered by private plan pay .25 percent for unemployment insurance to the State and may pay up to .50 percent toward private plan premium. State plan employers pay basic .25 percent for temporary disability insurance modified up to .75 percent and down to .10 percent by experience rating.	Employe tax of .5 percent of wages with a maximum of 30 cents weekly; employer to pay additional costs, if any.	Employe tax of 1 percent of wages up to $3,000.
Administrative costs	Sum determined annually by State Director of Finance; no limit on percent of contributions. Added administrative costs attributable to private plans assessed against plans in proportion to covered wages; limit .02 percent of wages.	.08 percent of wages plus assessment on employers of costs of maintaining separate accounts for experience-rating purposes. Added administrative costs attributable to private plans and to benefits to unemployed workers assessed against plans in proportion to covered wages; limit .02 percent of wages.	Each carrier responsible for own administrative expenses; State insurance fund as a carrier limited to 25 percent of contributions. Total administrative expenses of program for both employed and unemployed workers (not including expense of the State as a carrier) are assessed against all carriers including the State in proportion to covered wages; no limit.	Six percent of contributions.

PENSION PLANS, GOVERNMENT, AND SELECTED ECONOMICS FACTORS

Effects of Federal Action on Pension Plans

The federal government has affected the pattern of private pension plans through its policies relating to taxes, wage stabilization, labor, and Social Security, and through its monetary and fiscal policies.

Federal Tax Policies

Since 1938, federal legislation has provided for tax deduction of contributions to reserve funds of pension plans and for tax exemption of the earnings of such funds, provided specified requirements are met.[1]

These requirements include the provision that:

> . . . under the trust instrument it is impossible, at any time prior to the satisfaction of all liabilities with respect to employees and their beneficiaries under the trust, for any part of the corpus or income to be (within the taxable year or thereafter) used for, or diverted to, purposes other than for the exclusive benefit of his employees or their beneficiaries. . . .[2]

The World War II excess profits tax, generally speaking, increased net effective corporate tax rates and was generally expected to be permitted to lapse. Tax legislation applicable to pension plans, in addition to permitting the deduction of contribution for the funding of liabilities for current service, also permitted deductions for the funding of 10 percent, in any one year, of the liability for past service. This legislation tended to make it disadvantageous to defer the establishment of pension plans providing for funding, since the deferment of funding until after the expiration of the excess profits tax would have resulted in a smaller tax saving.

While pension benefits attributable to employer contributions are subject to income taxation and benefits attributable to employe contributions are not, employe contributions to pension plans are not deductible for income tax purposes. Since it is likely that the individual will have a lower effective tax rate after retirement age, this tax treatment tends to make a noncontributory plan more advantageous than a contributory plan.

Federal Wage Stabilization and Labor Policies

World War II wage stabilization policies limited increases in current cash compensation in the face of a relative scarcity of labor, but permitted the establishment of pension plans and increases in pension benefits provided for by existing plans. Under the circumstances, pension plans constituted a means whereby the total compensation of employes could be increased within the framework of the stabilization policies.

In addition, federal legislation relating to collective bargaining and the interpretation of this legislation by the National Labor Relations Board and the courts have affected the development of pension plans. Collective bargaining is defined in federal legislation as involving negotiations "with respect to wages, hours, and other terms and conditions of employment."[3] The National Labor Relations Board has ruled that provisions of pension plans come under the meaning of "conditions of employment" and therefore fall within the area of collective bargaining[4] This ruling has been upheld by the courts.[5]

Federal Old Age and Survivors' Insurance (OASI) Program

The OASI program has influenced both the benefit structure and minimum retirement age specified by private pension plans. Primary OASI benefits are first payable at age 65. While this minimum retirement age may reflect private practices at the time of passage of the Social Security Act, once established it tended to be carried over into private plans subsequently set up. Many private plans specify a total benefit which includes payments under OASI; other plans, although providing benefits excluding OASI, were originally designed to supplement it. Since primary OASI benefits are available only after age 65, the parties to private pension contracts, as a rule, are discouraged from establishing a plan that makes benefits available prior to that time.

Federal Policies Affecting Interest Rates and the Value of the Dollar

Open-market operations, reserve requirements, and rediscount rates of the Federal Reserve System, operations of the United States Treasury Department relating to the national debt, and federal fiscal policies are major factors in determining interest rates and the general level of prices.

The relationship of interest rates to the cost of a pension plan is discussed on page 7. Variations in the price level are equivalent to changes in the purchasing power of an annuity defined in terms of a given number of dollars. For example, during the period 1940 through 1953, consumer prices increased by 91 percent. As a result, a given money annuity would buy in 1953 only 52 percent of the goods and services that it would buy in 1940.

The effect of changes in the price level may be offset by post-retirement adjustments in benefits. One method involves the purchase of equities as a part of the investment program and the adjustment of benefits in acordance with the value of the investment portfolio. For example, the Teachers' Insurance and Annuity Association of America recently proposed the establishment of a College Retirement Equities Fund, which would invest in common stocks and other equities. Under this program, up to 50 percent of the individual's premium (made up of employe and employer contributions) could be invested in equities, and the balance would be invested in an annuity. After retirement, the employe would receive a variable income based upon current prices and dividends of the equities, in addition to a fixed dollar annuity.

Effects of Commonwealth Action on Pension Plans

Enactments of the Commonwealth directly affecting pension plans are tax legislation, permissive legislation, and legislation regulating insurance companies.

Commonwealth Tax Legislation Relating to Pension Plans

If a trust under an employer's stock bonus, pension or profit-sharing plan for employes or their beneficiaries is officially ruled exempt from federal income taxation, then personalty held in trust and the principal value of all annuities are exempt from the county four-mill tax,[6] the first class school district personalty tax,[7] the Pittsburgh city tax on personalty,[8] and the corporate loans tax.[9] In addition, the Pennsylvania Corporate Net Income Tax Act and the Corporation Income Tax Law define net income as "that returned to and ascertained by the Federal Goevrnment," so that if contributions made by an employer to a company pension plan are exempt from taxation under federal law, they will also be exempt under Pennsylvania law.[10]

Commonwealth Permissive Legislation

Three permissive laws in the field of private pensions have been enacted in Pennsylvania. Act No. 284 of the 1921 Session authorized stock and mutual insurance companies to grant pensions out of company earnings and provided that officers and employes may be given a pension "for faithful and long continued service, who have in such service become old, infirm or disabled."[11] Act No. 106, Session of 1933, provided that "Every business corporation may grant allowances or pensions out of the earnings of the Corporation to its directors, officers or employes for faithful and long continued service, who have in such service become old, infirm, or disabled."[12] Act No. 280, 1953 Session, permitted corporations to grant stock options to officers and employes and provided that "all corporations organized under the laws of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, including those corporations organized not for profit, may grant allowances or pensions to officers, directors and employes for faithful and long continued services, and, after the death of any such officer, director or employe, either while in the service of the corporation or after retirement, pensions or allowances may be granted or continued to his or her dependents: Provided, That such allowances to his or her dependents shall be reasonable in amount and paid only for a limited time: And provided further, That any such allowance, unless part of an employe-benefit plan or employment contract in effect at the time of retirement or death of the officer, director or employe, shall not exceed in total the amount of the compensation paid to him or her during the 12 months preceding retirement or death."[13] The act also validated any options, pensions, and allowances granted or paid prior to the enactment of the law.

Also, the Estates Act of 1947 exempted private pension plans from the "Rule Against Perpetuities" and from restrictions against accumulations.[14] Some states regard pension plans as securities and require registration with the state security commission. This is not the case in Pennsylvania. However, if stock is sold for the benefit of a pension plan, the plan might have to qualify under the provisions of The Pennsylvania Securities Act.[15]

Commonwealth Legislation Regulating Insurance Companies

Pension plans handled through insurance companies are regulated by the Insurance Department. The Insurance Commissioner must approve all forms for contract relating to annuities issued, sold, or disposed of by an insurance company.[16] Annuities contracted by an employer on behalf of an employe need not conform to the general provisions relating to annuities.[17] An express regulation has been made regarding the treatment of dividends or rate reductions made under group annuity contracts. Any such dividend or rate reduction may be applied to reduce the employer's part of the cost of the contract or policy. However, if the plan is contributory and the dividends or rate reductions exceed the employer's contributions, the surplus must be used for the exclusive benefit of the employes.[18]

Relationship Between Pension Plans and Selected Economic Factors

Benefit structure, cost, vesting, and funding elements of pension plans generate reactions on the part of individuals and firms which are reflected in hiring practices, movement of members of the labor force, and other economic factors.

The Effect of Pension Plans on Hiring Age Restrictions

The cost-reducing effect of a minimum service requirement (or a maximum entry age together with a minimum retirement age) is discussed on page 7. A plan without such requirements may encourage the employer to obtain an equivalent cost reduction through the use of hiring age restrictions.

The Effect of Pension Plans on Movement of Members of the Labor Force

Pension plan coverage may be attractive to many and may be a factor in movement of some members of the labor force to firms having pension plans. On the other hand, pension plans may impede the movement of employes in two ways: (1) If pension plans lead to hiring age restrictions, opportunities for employes in certain age groups will be limited. (2) If employer contributions are not vested, an employe who changes his job will lose all, or part, of the pension credits he has accumulated. An employe's valuation of the loss increases with length of service and proximity to retirement age.

The Effect of Funding and Vesting Provisions on the Payment of Pensions in the Event of Pension Plan Termination

An accurate assessment of the extent to which pension plan terminations result in the loss of pensions or pension credits presupposes the existence of an established registration system for pension plans. In the absence of such a registry, the following discussion is offered for the purpose of providing a general orientation and some tentative estimates with respect to the magnitudes involved. Although pension plan termination may result from circumstances other than "closure,"[19] the observations offered are, in the main, concerned with terminations which come about by virtue of closures.

Closure rates and employes with pension coverage.—A survey was made of closures which occurred during 1949-52 among firms which, prior to closure, participated in the Unemployment Compensation program.[20] Appendix Table 1 shows the average annual number of closures during the period 1949 to 1952 as a percent of firms active as of March, 1952, by industry group, and by number of Pennsylvania employes of the firm one year prior to closure.[21]

Average annual closure rates varied inversely with the number of Pennsylvanians employed by the firm—from about 10 percent for firms employing 1 to 9 Pennsylvanians to about .4 percent for firms employing 500 or more Pennsylvanians. By industry, average annual closure rates varied from about 4.2 percent in the fabricated metals industry to about 14 percent in the mining industry.

On the other hand, pension plan coverage varied directly with size of firm—from about 1.2 percent for firms employing 1 to 9 Pennsylvanians to 69 percent for firms employing 500 or more. By industry, pension plan coverage varied from 2.2 percent in the construction industry to 87 percent in the primary metals industry. (See Tables 26 and 28.)

[19] The term "closure" refers to firms which went out of business or ceased to have employes without going out of business. The closure data relate only to firms subject to the Unemployment Compensation Law when active.

[20] See Appendix B.

[21] The number of Pennsylvanians employed a year prior to closure was used, since employment typically declines prior to closure.

In the light of available evidence, it would appear that the estimates presented below are upper-limit estimates. For example, the estimates would be reduced if interstate firms were identified and assigned closure rates corresponding to their total employment rather than to their Pennsylvania employment.

It is estimated that .4 percent (with a 95 percent confidence interval of .2 to .6 percent) of the employes with pension coverage in 1953 could be expected, at the average closure rates prevailing in 1949-52, to become involved in closures in one year, provided no correlation obtains between closure and the presence of a pension plan. This estimate has a possible range of 0 to 2.3 percent (with a 95 percent confidence interval of 0 to 2.7 percent), depending on the degree of such correlation. Over a 20-year period, it is estimated that, at average 1949-52 closure rates, 6.6 percent (with a 95 percent confidence interval of 4.3 to 8.9 percent) could be expected to become involved, assuming that no correlation obtains between closure and the presence of a pension plan and that the probability of an employe's being involved in a closure during a given year is not decreased by his having been involved in previous closures. This estimate could range, at average 1949-52 closure rates, from 0 to 14.5 percent (with a 95 percent confidence interval of 0 to 17.8 percent), depending on the assumptions used.

Effect of vesting and funding provisions on loss of pensions.—A closure may not result in termination of the pension plan covering employes of the firm involved. Under most royalty-financed plans, the employe does not lose his pension credits if he obtains a job with another employer participating in the plan. Half of the employes with pension coverage who were estimated as likely to be involved in closures (see above) were members of plans of this type.

In the absence of knowledge of the vesting and funding provisions of a pension plan, inferences cannot be made regarding the probability of payment or nonpayment of pension claims in the event of termination of the plan. Considering both vesting and funding provisions, termination of a pension plan may produce the following situations:

Note: A "closure" is a firm which went out of business or which, while continuing in business, ceased to employ Pennsylvanians.

a. Under a fully funded plan the situation depends upon the presence or absence of vesting: With full and immediate vesting, there would be sufficient funds on hand at termination to guarantee retired persons full benefits and to provide benefits based upon service prior to termination for those not retired. Under a fully funded plan without full and immediate vesting, there would be sufficient funds to continue full benefits to retired persons but inadequate funds to provide full benefits to all of those not retired. In the latter case, contributions to the trust fund or insurance company would have been less than in the case of a fully vested plan because of the discount made in anticipation of resignations and discharges. However, inadequate funds may be supplemented by liquidation of assets.

b. Under a partially funded plan which provides for funding future service as it accrues and past service over time, the amount received at termination depends upon accumulated funds, the provisions of the plan for distributing these funds, and assets which may be liquidated for purposes of pension payments. Many plans assign first priority to the claims of retired persons.

c. Under an unfunded plan, in the absence of assets which may be liquidated for purposes of pension benefit payments, no benefits will be available at termination, either to retired persons or to persons employed at that date.

STATISTICAL NOTES

Survey of Pennsylvania Adults

A cluster random sample of Pennsylvania adults was selected at the rate of 1 in 1,750 and surveyed by means of interviews.[1] (For survey forms, see Exhibits A and B.) A sample of 1 in 1,750 dwelling units was selected from the 1950 Census of Population and Housing in groups of 3 neighboring households; except that in rural areas the sample consisted of a selection of small land areas containing approximately 6 households each. In addition, the sample included a representative segment of dwelling units constructed since 1950.

[1] The collection and tabulation of data were performed by the United States Bureau of the Census under contract with the Joint State Government Commission.

Survey of Pennsylvania Employers

A stratified random sample of employers according to industry and size of firm was selected from a mailing list of employers whose employes were covered by the Pennsylvania Unemployment Compensation program.[2] This list was obtained from the Pennsylvania Department of Labor and Industry, Bureau of Employment Security. The sampling fraction was 100 percent for firms employing 500 or more Pennsylvanians. For firms employing less than 500 Pennsylvanians, the campling fraction varied by industry group and decreased as size of firm decreased. A total of 4,800 employers was included in the sample.

The survey forms used consisted of a preliminary survey form (Exhibit C) designed to ascertain the number of employes, number of plans, and coverage; and final survey forms (Exhibits D and E) designed to ascertain the principal characteristics of the plans.

The preliminary survey form was mailed to all employers in the sample, of whom 50 percent responded. Final survey forms were mailed to all respondents with plans.

A subsample of employers not responding to the preliminary survey form was selected (again including all employers of 500 or more Pennsylvanians). These employers and all employers who had not returned the final survey forms were contacted by field representatives of the Bureau of Employment Security if their headquarters were in Pennsylvania. If their headquarters were out of state, they were contacted by letter.

The sampling variability of the percentage estimates depends upon the size of the estimate and the numbers of responding and nonresponding employers in each of the industry-size groups represented in the total on which the estimate is based.

Appendix Table 2 presents 95 percent confidence intervals corresponding to selected percentage estimates for each industry group. For example, it was estimated (see Table 36) that for all industry groups combined, 55.8 percent of Pennsylvania employes having pension coverage were members of plans having no provision for the vesting of employer contributions. The first row of Appendix Table 2 indicates that the 95 percent confidence interval for this estimate is 53.7 percent to 57.9 percent. The intervals were not computed for all of the percentages because of the cost of computation. However, it can be shown that 95 percent confidence intervals for estimates relating to the group of all industries lie within the limits 0.0 percent to 9.0 percent for estimates in the neighborhood of 1 percent, 1.7 percent to 18.3 percent for estimates in the neighborhood of 10 percent, and 49.7 percent to 70.3 percent for estimates in the neighborhood of 60 percent. It may be noted that these maximum ranges are about five times as wide as the intervals shown in the first row of Appendix Table 2.

[2] Major employe groups not covered by the Unemployment Compensation program are farm labor and employes of government and railroads.

Survey of Closures

A stratified random sample of closures according to industry was selected from a file of Pennsylvania Unemployment Compensation employer accounts which had been deleted because the firms ceased to employ Pennsylvanians during the period 1949-52. The sampling rate varied by industry group and resulted in a total sample size of 4,367.

The Pennsylvania employment one year prior to closure was ascertained for each firm included in the sample by reference to files of the Bureau of Employment Security. The 95 percent confidence intervals for average annual closure rates for 1949-52, by number of Pennsylvania employes of firms one year prior to closure, are as follows:

Number of Pennsylvania Employes of Firms One Year Prior to Closure	95 Percent Confidence Intervals for Average Annual Closure Rates, 1949-52
10 to 99	2.0 - 2.6
100 to 499	.6 - 1.9
500 or over	.0 - 1.3

While the closure rates by number of Pennsylvania employes one year prior to closure are subject to sampling variability, the closure rates by industry are not, since the number of closures and the total number of firms in each industry are known.

To estimate the percent of employes covered by pension plans in 1953 who could be expected to be involved in closures in one year at average 1949-52 closure rates (assuming no correlation between pension plans and closures), the number of employes involved in closures in a given industry-size group was estimated on the basis of the employment of closed firms a year prior to closure, and this was multiplied by the estimated percentage of all employes in that industry-size group who were covered by pension plans. Such estimates for the various industry-size groups were summed, and the sum was divided by the estimated total number of employes covered by pension plans.

To obtain the twenty-year estimate (assuming that the probability of an employe's being involved in a closure in a given year is independent of his closure experience in prior years), the percentage [1—B (x=0|20,P)] was was computed for each industry-size group, using the binomial distribution with P equal to the estimated percentage of the employes with pension plan coverage in that industry-size group who could be expected to be involved in closures in one year. The twenty-year percentage estimates for the various industry-size groups were converted to absolute numbers and summed, and the sum was divided by the estimated total number of employes covered by pension plans.

For the percentage of employes with pension coverage who could be expected to be involved in closures under specified assumptions, the 95 percent confidence intervals are given in the text.
